Hastings' 2010 Rolling Stone article "The Runaway General" spurred the resignation of General Stanley McChrystal. Three years later, the author died in a fiery crash, by some accounts suspiciously, as he feared he was being followed by the NSA. This was his debut novel, found in his files after his death. It follows the career of a young magazine intern in the early 2000s, leading up to the Iraq war—based on Hastings' life.

This is one of those stories that leaves the reader with no room for excuses the next time they're faced with almost any challenge. Indianapolis Colts' Head Coach Pagano was "sidelined" with leukemia in his rookie year of coaching. While fighting said cancer, he coached from his bedside via phone calls, emails, and texts. He took the Colts to two winning seasons and the divisional playoffs . . . from his bed. The fan-generated #Chuckstrong movement/campaign has raised $1.1 million for cancer research. Now, what's our excuse? Get ready to be inspired by Sidelined.

JEAN KWOK

MAMBO IN CHINATOWN

A HEARTWARMING TALE OF SELF-DISCOVERY

photograph by Chris Macke

From the bestselling author of Girl in Translation comes a novel about a young woman torn between her family duties in Chinatown and her escape into the world of ballroom dancing. Between graduating with honors from Harvard, in English and American literature, and earning an MFA in fiction from Columbia, Kwok worked for three years as a professional ballroom dancer for Fred Astaire Studios in New York City. Mambo in Chinatown was selected for Publishers Lunch's Buzz Books 2014.

My name is Charlie Wong and I'm the daughter of a dancer and a noodle-maker. My mother was once a star ballerina at the famed Beijing Dance Academy before she ran off to marry my father, the handsomest noodle-maker in Beijing—or at least that's what she always called him before she died. Hand in hand, they escaped to America to start their family. Unfortunately, my mother's genes seemed to miss me altogether. I took after Pa, minus the good-looking part. And minus the manual dexterity as well: he never managed to pass his considerable noodle-making skills on to me, much as he tried. So at twenty-two years old I was instead working as a dishwasher at a restaurant in New York's Chinatown. Pa was their noodle master. Customers lined up at the back door to purchase packages of his uncooked noodles to take home.

Peering now through the window that connected the tiny dishwashing room to the kitchen, I could see Mrs. Lee standing by the back door. She'd put on extra lipstick for Pa, and she fixed her eyes on his tanned hands wrapped around the bamboo pole.

9781594632006 / $27.95 HC / Riverhead Books

"Can you make them extra long for me?" she asked in Mandarin.

She stood a bit stiffly, careful not to brush against the grease-covered doorframe.

Pa nodded as he hoisted the bamboo pole and lowered it once again onto the dough on the table. The end of the pole fit into a hole punched in the wall, just above the table surface. As he rolled the pole, the dough became thinner on every pass. It was hard work. I knew his hands were ridged with calluses. Then he sliced the dough into perfectly regular strands with his cleaver, and began pulling them by hand. He twirled them into a rope, then stretched them again and again. It was like magic.

He looked up to flash Mrs. Lee a smile. "Must be your birthday."

She actually giggled, a woman of her age. "You are an intelligent man."

I would have snorted, only the waiters pushed another plastic bus tub filled with stacks of bowls through the other window at that moment, the one connecting the dish room to the restaurant. Everybody knew it was good luck to have long noodles on your birthday since they symbolized long life, just as many of us in Chinatown remembered Mrs. Lee's husband had passed on a number of years ago. I dumped the food off the dishes, then piled everything in another tub. I was used to women complimenting Pa—but if you're trying to catch him for your own, good luck, lady. Pa hadn't dated since Ma died and probably never would; he was still in love with her. I hefted the heavy tub with ease, then hauled it over to the washing sink. I'd been working this job for years, ever since leaving high school, and I had the biceps to prove it. I ducked my head to look through the window again and see what Mrs. Lee was up to. I caught a whiff of ginger and garlic that one of the cooks had just dropped into a wok.

Pa had given the ends of the dough to his assistant and they'd stretched the noodles across the room while the other cook dodged them. Mrs. Lee beamed as Pa rolled up the finished noodles for her.

"You should join us. I promise the noodles will be tender," she said.

Pa gave her an old-fashioned bow from the waist as he handed her package to her. "You are very kind but I am so busy taking care of my two daughters. You know how it is."

"Of course," she said. Her bright lips drooped at the corners. "Next time, then."

"Yes, I wish you long life and happiness," said Pa, turning back to his assistant. "Get me a sack of flour from the basement, will you?"

I should have been the one helping him. Pa had brought me to the restaurant to watch and train ever since I was a child. Hard as I tried, I still dropped everything. "You have to coax the dough," Pa said, but I pummeled it instead. A noodle master has magic in his fingers. Mine were as clumsy as if I were always wearing gloves. Pa was tall and lean. His defined nose and cheekbones made for a strong face on a man, but those features were too sharp for a woman, according to my Aunt Monica and Uncle Henry. I was tanned like the rest of Pa's family, and for a Chinese girl, I was homely. I had learned early on not to attract any attention. Most of the time, I succeeded.

I wiped the sweat from my forehead. It was the afternoon lull but my legs were already starting to ache from the hours I'd spent on my feet since the early morning. I poured in some detergent, then turned on only the hot faucet and let it fill the sink. At the beginning, I couldn't bear to put my hands in the scalding water, even when I'd diluted it with some cold. I'd tried to use gloves until I realized the steaming water poured in over the tops of the gloves anyway when I submerged my arms. But if I was good for nothing but washing dishes, I'd resolved to be the best dishwasher I could. I'd increased the heat day by day until my body adjusted. I didn't mind the way my hands and arms became reddened and chapped. It was the cost of my labor.

The rising steam combined with the August heat was stifling. I dropped a stack of bowls into the water, then plunged in my hands and forearms to soap them. My skin had become so rough now I barely winced anymore. The hotter the water, the faster I could work. Although the restaurant had a dishwashing machine, it was so ancient I had to make the dishes as clean as possible before loading it anyway, rather than waste time cleaning out the debris from the machine traps. Otherwise, I would have to check the dishes when they came out of the machine to know they were clean. Especially during the mealtime rush, every second was precious or we'd run out of clean dishes and silverware.

I pulled out another stack of dirty bowls from the bus tub and found a large roach hanging from one of them. I froze. I didn't want to drop everything into the soapy water and have to fish out the now-boiled roach. The bug took advantage of my confusion, racing up my hand and onto my arm.

I screeched. The dishes I'd been holding clattered onto the floor while I batted at the roach, trying to get it off my shirt before it reached my face. Suddenly, a white cooking cloth whipped the roach off of me. It landed upside down on the floor, thick legs waving, and a man's foot smashed it.

"You are the clumsiest dishwasher we've ever had!" said Mr. Hu, the owner of the restaurant. His round cheeks seemed covered with a perpetual layer of grease. "Clean it up right away!"

"I'm sorry," I said. "I was—"

"I don't want to hear it!"

Pa was standing in the doorway. "Mr. Hu, she works very hard."

Mr. Hu softened when he saw my father. Without Pa, his restaurant would lose most of its business. "I know. And she is strong too. Just get rid of this mess, okay? Dishes are expensive."

I started sweeping up the broken crockery right away. When Mr. Hu was gone, I said, "Thanks, Pa." Although I could understand Chinese, I couldn't speak it very well. Pa and I usually communicated in English. Sometimes he spoke Chinese and I answered him in English.

"Anyone can drop a soapy dish. That man needs a vacation." He gave me an affectionate pat on the shoulder, then went back to the noodle station.

If it weren't for Pa, I didn't know if the restaurant would have kept me on since there was no shortage of cheap labor. However, I did work hard and I knew the restaurant had gone through a number of dishwashers before I was hired. It was dirty work, even for Chinatown.

An hour later, I was sleeping across a row of chairs by the wall at the back of the restaurant. All of the staff took naps there during our breaks because our shifts could extend from early morning until late in the night, depending on business. If more customers showed up, the restaurant stayed open. Everyone ignored us as long as we kept our backs to the other tables, and if we didn't snore too loudly.

Someone tapped me on the side of my head. I jerked awake and peeled my cheek off the vinyl of the chair, annoyed and disoriented. "What?" I saw the yellowing wallpaper, then turned to focus on my little sister Lisa's heart-shaped face. "Don't touch my hair."

"Sorry," she said but I could tell she'd done it on purpose. "You wouldn't wake up otherwise."

I pushed myself up on one elbow and frowned at her. "Did you try?"

"No. I know from experience." When I rolled my eyes, she leaned in and whispered, "I found an ad for a new job for you."

“I want the noise to go out, I want the Church to go out onto the streets.”

— Pope Francis, World Youth Day, July 25, 2013

The best of POPE FRANCIS

Only Love Can Save Us

978-1-61278-741-1, $16.95

As Pope Francis speaks from a new and much larger pulpit, it is easy to forget not only the many challenges he faced as Cardinal Jorge Bergoglio in Buenos Aires, Argentina, but also the many events that shaped the perspective he is now sharing as pope. This collection of talks and addresses give insight into the mind of the Holy Father.

New Beginning, New Hope

978-1-61278-767-1, $14.95

Pope Francis' homilies and audiences from Holy Week through Pentecost reflect his joy, compassion, and love for all people, which has captivated the world. The Pope's grace-filled perspective during this most hopeful season of the Church year will inspire and encourage you.

Through the Year with Pope Francis

978-1-61278-766-4, $16.95

Now you can start - or finish - every day encouraged by the same engaging spirit alive in these 365 short meditations written by Pope Francis. Let his words inspire and challenge you, push you deeper into Scripture, raise your prayer to new heights, or simply fill you with gratitude for God's personal love for you.

Read Pope Francis for the first and most comprehensive perspective of the man, the man he replaces as Bishop of Rome, and the global challenges Pope Francis faces in the universal church.

Staging Ground

An American Theater and Its Ghosts

Leslie Stainton

“Reading Leslie Stainton’s Staging Ground: An American Theater and Its Ghosts is like having a front-row seat at a thrilling epic drama. Stainton packs her stage with real characters, the famous and the infamous, and events unfold in a tumult of action both tragic and comic and at times heartbreakingly poignant. This book is great theater—immediate, engrossing, cathartic.”

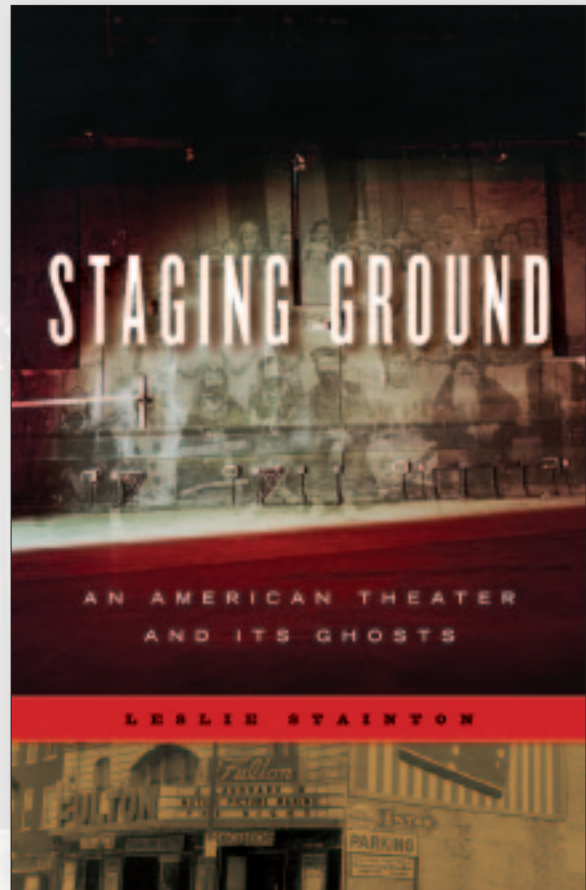

—Helen Sheehy,
author of Eleonora Duse: A Biography

In this poignant and personal history of one of America’s oldest theaters, Leslie Stainton captures the story not just of an extraordinary building but of a nation’s tumultuous struggle to invent itself. Built in 1852 and in use ever since, the Fulton Theatre in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, is uniquely ghosted. Its foundations were once the walls of a colonial jail that in 1763 witnessed the massacre of the last surviving Conestoga Indians. Those same walls later served to incarcerate fugitive slaves. Interweaving past and present, private anecdote and public record, Stainton unfolds the story of this emblematic space, where for more than 250 years Americans scripted and rescripted their history. Staging Ground sheds light on issues that continue to form us as a people: the evolution of American culture and faith, the immigrant experience, the growth of cities, the emergence of women in art and society, the spread of advertising, the flowering of transportation and technology, and the abiding paradox of a nation founded on the principle of equality for “all men,” yet engaged in a human slave trade and in the systematic oppression of the American Indian.

Bear Naked

R.J. Eliason

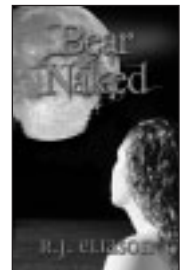

LSIG

Amanda Burnson is a typical teen with all the typical problems: excess weight, struggles with body odor, random people trying to kill her, and a boyfriend who just might be a werewolf. In the small Iowa town that Amanda calls home, new attitudes are colliding with the usual annoying old ones; menacing new faces alongside comforting ones. Things will never be the same once this brew is boiled. 260 pp.

Letters from the Carnival of Death

Correspondence from Three of Terry's Texas Rangers

Pauline Scott Goldman CPNO
Michelle M. Haas, editor

In 1861 the Hill boys of Hill's Prairie (near Bastrop, Texas) rode off to war. They had signed on with Col. Benjamin Franklin Terry's 8th Texas Cavalry, better known as Terry's Texas Rangers, one of the most celebrated Confederate regiments of the Civil War. The missives contained in this volume were penned by John, Robert and D.O. Hill to their sister, Mary Scott Hill, during the war. 142 pp.

The Never Ending Quest

By Susan Corey

Price: $34.99

ISBN: 978-1460225837

Humanity seems to be going on a never ending quest to destroy and save Earth. The paradox of our ways is catching up on us... Will our Earth finally collapse in a tragic fall? Some interested – and interesting – people in Canada assisted by the USA and Australia are ready to take on a challenge for the planet's salvation. But will they have enough time to save our home? Find out in this compelling, socially relevant, and timely read by author Susan Corey.

With help from sources deep within the oceans and beyond our planet, they uncover buried truths and wisdom that may just be what could save Earth. And this is just the beginning of their extraordinary and otherworldly journey that ultimately leads to the true dawning of the Age of Aquarius.

Questions

by David Maclagan

ISBN-10: 1479774103

ISBN-13: 978-1479774104

Paperback: 56 pages

Author David Maclagan invites everyone to put their thoughts on paper with his new book, Questions. When people are presented with a blank page, it's amazing how they can come up with something different, something unique, something creative, something compelling, and something wonderful. And that's what this book is all about – freeing the mind and sharing answers to the world through pen and paper.

It's a book that leaves blank pages for the reader to fill in a short story that answers the questions in the mind of the reader. There is no right or wrong answer, just what the reader's imagination can come up with and print neatly. Some say people will be able to look back at what they write and reflect on what they answered.

By Jeanne Ann Off

Paperback (978-1-61856-483-2) : $10.99

Hardback (978-1-61856-487-0) : $25.50

Sonny Calhoun is murdered. Find out who did it in this riveting whodunit. What makes this novel even more engaging are the different stories and lives intertwined within. There's the romance of Ty and Patti, the kidnapping and escape of four people, and the Secret Organization. All of these enrich and add excitement to the investigation of Sonny's murder.

About the Author

Jeanne Ann Off published several of her personal experience articles in a weekly magazine, The Fence Post. Her first book, a fiction novel, Acid and Bravery, is a mystery based on personal experience and imagination. She took a writing course from Institute of Children's Literature. She is married to her wonderful husband Don Off, and they celebrated their 57th wedding anniversary in 2014.

JOHN BRANDON

TALES OF PEOPLE AT THE EDGE OF POSSIBILITY

The acclaimed author of Arkansas, Citrus County, and A Million Heavens presents his debut story collection. From gamblers and psychics to wanderers and priests, the varied characters in his 11 expertly crafted stories are each on the verge of finding out what they can get away with—and what they can't. Here, Brandon discusses his latest work, his characters, and the places from which he draws inspiration.

I tried to describe to a friend the types of stories you write and I found it difficult to pin down on one central theme. Crime seems to be somewhat of a theme, although I would hardly call you a crime novelist. With barbequed manatees and unexplained human brains in Further Joy, I continue to be happily perplexed. Can you speak about the role crime plays as a writing device in your stories?

It's interesting to me to have a character do something against the agreed-upon rules, against their own long-run interests even. Then your task as a writer is to foster empathy for that person, for this character who's doing things that are "wrong" or perverse. I guess I like having characters in the mix that are willing to break the law—whether they're eager to or forced into it. There's potential thrill there. The lawbreaker's presence in the world of the story expands the possibilities. And I've always respected people who forge their own moral code. Their personal code might not coordinate perfectly with the law, but it's usually more stringent in some ways than the codes many law-abiding citizens adhere to. I think it's a fast way to get an idea about a person—to find out which laws s/he believes it's acceptable to break under certain circumstances, which laws are made to be broken or bent, which should never be broken. And in the end, the threat of punishment from the authorities isn't as intriguing to me—although pursuing cops are certainly good for plot and tension—as seeing the character have to live with whatever they've done. They either feel guilty and regretful, or they keep making a bigger and bigger mess for themselves, or they're successful in their crime and do it repeatedly and wind up feeling like any person with a job does at the end of the day.

What drew you to writing a short story collection instead of a full novel?

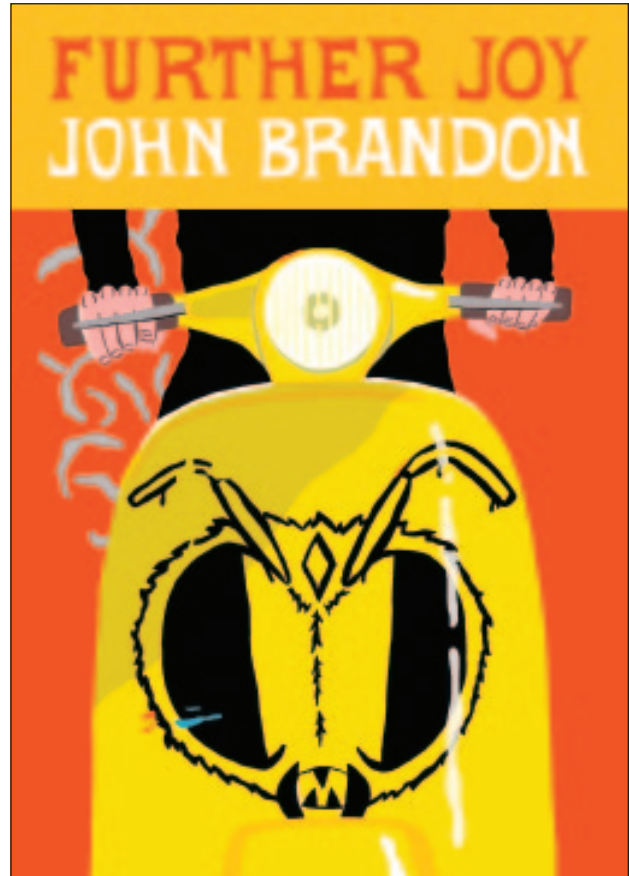

Stories are more difficult to me than novels. There's delicate voodoo in getting somewhere the reader wants to be and hasn't been before in 15 or 20 pages, whereas a novel is just a ton of work. I truly hope I don't write any more stories. I'd like to be done with them for life. In the fall, while I was taking a break from fixing the Further Joy stories up, I scribbled down this short-short, just a couple pages, and I was like, "What the hell are you doing? You're almost out of this game. Don't be so stupid." Of course, months later I still find myself thinking about the thing, about why this there-page whatever-it-is doesn't work right. Anyway, I knew I had a bunch of stories that could be pretty good if I worked them over. I could either fix them and get them out of my mind, or drag them around forever. It's nice to have them all cleared from my writing space, and to feel like I've gotten them in good shape. One less area of life where I'm delinquent.

Was it hard to keep from getting lost in these characters' stories and wanting to write more? And if so, is there any one story in particular about which you are dying to know what happened to the characters in the end?

No, I don't experience that feeling of wanting to spend more time with a character. I'm very fond of some of them, but it still always feels right to move on. I don't expect to ever write a trilogy or use characters in multiple stories. The characters usually only rightly exist for me in that one particular time and space. It's kind of frightening to think of them getting out. I usually feel, at the end of a story or novel, like I've battled the characters to an honorable truce. It's time for both sides to walk away and lick wounds. Nobody's real proud, but everybody's honor is intact.

After reading an interview with you online, I picked up a copy of Tom Drury's The End of Vandalism. That novel successfully created a whole sad and beautiful universe within a small town. Place seems very important in your stories. What is it about small towns that allow you to tell your stories with such detail and clarity?

It might have less to do with what small towns offer and more to do with my discomfort using urban settings. A city makes me feel hemmed in. I don't think it makes any sense; it's just one of those quirks. In a city, it feels to me like there's not enough space and everything already happened and the atmosphere is finished and the identity too established. I don't normally have a real place in mind that I'm trying to recreate on the page. If you say Miami or New York or Atlanta, everybody already knows all about it. I usually pick some place on the outskirts, or just invent a little town, or leave the town unnamed. That way I can fashion the setting into whatever I need it to be. I do like to think setting is important to me, and I like to have control over it. The vegetation and weather and whatnot might be accurate, but I'm going to manipulate a lot of other details to serve my purposes.

You grew up in Florida. This novel features several stories that take place there. I've always thought Florida would be a strange place to grow up with all the vacationers and retirees coming and going. How did your early experiences there shape your need or want to become a writer?

I didn't think of being a writer until I went to Gainesville. Being an artist of any kind wasn't in the air of the town where I grew up. In Gainesville it was, of course. As far as Florida goes, I don't think I understood how strange the state was until I was gone a few years. I had to go to normal places to understand that my home territory was ridiculous and beautiful and frightening. I mean, I live in the Twin Cities now. Minnesota is not ridiculous. It's not beautiful. It's not frightening. Everybody here is from here. People want to be sane and they are.

For a long time I didn't write about Florida. I couldn't find a way into it because it was so familiar. Other parts of the South seemed open and waiting for me. My first novel (unpublished) was set in Eastern Tennessee. Then Arkansas obviously in Arkansas. Finally I wrote Citrus County, but that still wasn't truly my turf. Citrus County is more out in the country. It's both bleaker and less spoiled than my town—New Port Richey. My town used to be all hopeless strip malls, and now it's mostly hopeless strip malls with a few gleaming corporate strip malls mixed in. It's not bleak or cheerful. It's not urban or suburban or rural, nor is it a beach community. It's hard to say

“ I don’t expect to ever write a trilogy or use characters in multiple stories. The characters usually only rightly exist for me in that one particular time and space. It’s kind of frightening to think of them getting out. ” what it is. The single story I ever wrote that was intentionally about New Port Richey got cut from the collection. My editor said it was unfocused. I was like, “Well then I nailed it!”

Several of the characters in this novel seem to be on the verge of something such as when Garner is about to take a chance on making back his fortunes or Sophia’s trying to come to terms with her gift. Is there a feeling or idea that you believe ties all these characters together?

If there is, it’s incidental. I never try to carry a theme over from one story to the next. It’s hard enough within one story. The characters are all so separate to me—it’d be hard to talk about what they have in common.

My favorite character is Uncle Tunsil. He didn’t say much but when he did it was to the point. I can respect that. Was there a specific character in any of the stories that you enjoyed creating the most?

Oh, I enjoyed Uncle Tunsil. And James. I’ve dedicated no small number of pages over the years to characters that are bitter or misguided or amoral, so it really is a treat to write a good fellow like Tunsil. There’s the industrious Marky. And Franklin was fun, because I never knew what he was going to say. I like them all, though—I can’t think of any I didn’t enjoy wrestling with.

Some of the characters in your previous novels and in Further Joy have struggled with finding work. You have mentioned in the past that you worked several odd jobs while writing on your first novel. What is it about that experience and the economic downturn that continues to influence your writing today?

Hmm. I can’t deny I shy away from characters that go to the office Monday to Friday in a Volvo and have a 401(k) and whatnot. I like reading about that, though—the soul-killing corporate milieu. I guess I’m more likely to write characters that aren’t even in the running for exchanging their soul for a secure financial future. They’re not candidates for it. I do see what you mean. In the story collection there are characters who are trying to get employed, and characters who are no longer employed, characters working for free, a character trying to get *un*employed, a character who’s been promised a steady job but doesn’t think it’ll come to be. I’m not going to sit here and deny that working at factories and warehouses for something like minimum wage for many years doesn’t play any factor, but I will say that I was already writing about these types of folks before all that, when I was in school. I guess I have a natural affinity for the career-challenged, and by happy (not so happy at the time) accident I got some firsthand knowledge of the experience.

Here’s a wildcard question. You are a big SEC football fan, as am I. How do you think the playoff system will affect the SEC’s dominance in college football?

You can never tell, but there’s a chance it won’t change the outcome of the seasons much at all. You could still wind up pretty regularly having an SEC school against the best non-SEC school in the big game. Which is what we have now.

What books have you read recently that you recommend or give high praise to?

I’ve been reading Shirley Jackson lately. She’s great. The Martian Chronicles, by Ray Bradbury is top-notch stuff—way more interesting than Fahrenheit 451. And I was really taken with a novel I read by Patricia Highsmith called The Tremor of Forgery.

What’s next for you?

I’ll probably start a novel over the summer. But like I said, I live in Minnesota, so it may be a struggle to keep myself indoors when there’s green grass to be seen outside.

LAURA MCBRIDE

WE ARE CALLED TO RISE

A NOVEL OF REDEMPTION AND UNEXPECTED LOVE

photograph by Michelle Adams

Making her stunning debut, McBride introduces four disparate people living in Las Vegas—an immigrant boy, a young war veteran, and two women—each of whom suffer the effects of one cataclysmic event. A story of great tragedy and tremendous hope, We Are Called to Rise reminds readers that rescue from despair can come through compassion and charity—even in the darkest of moments.

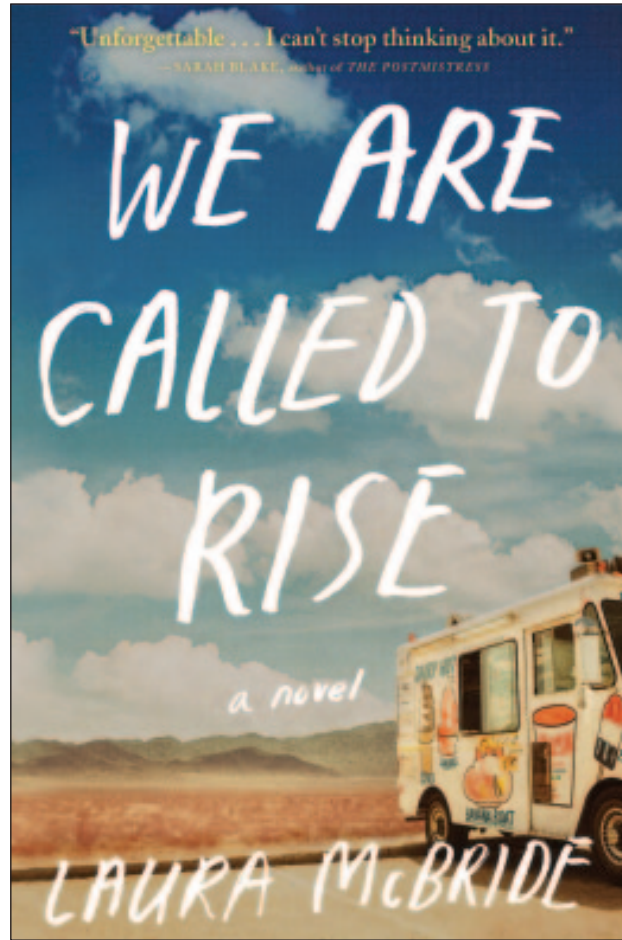

Your book is getting a lot of buzz, with accolades from such authors as Sarah Blake (The Postmistress) and Carol Anshaw (Carry the One). As a first-time novelist, what's your response to such positive reaction?

Hurray!!!! I don't think the deliverer of positive reactions changes my response much—I'll take kudos from anywhere—but of course I am delighted when someone likes the book. I loved when Carol noted "the reluctance with which [my characters] become their best selves." This was not a way I had thought about Avis or Luis, but I instantly recognized its validity. With that phrase, she took me past my own understanding of the story. As for Sarah, her "I can't stop thinking about it" is perhaps the single best thing anyone has said. I could not stop thinking about the core issues I was exploring here, and that at least one person would have the same reaction is really satisfying.

Most think the entire city of Las Vegas is as glitzy as shown on TV shows and films, but you depict a very different side of Sin City—one that is gritty and less glamorous. How did you come to know this side of the city?

I've lived in Las Vegas for nearly three decades, so I could write another book in response to this question, but I'll try to choose some central experiences. Not long after I came to town, and for seven years, I worked at a non-profit organization; for much of that time, my office was a converted bedroom in a tiny, run-down house just off Main Street. The sewage pipe used to leak under the carpet outside my door (I was pregnant when I worked there so this particular memory is quite vivid), and if I was the first to arrive in the morning, then I sometimes bumped into one or another of the homeless men who used our front porch as a place to sleep. I'd make a pot of coffee, and sometimes the man would stay and have a cup, but sometimes he would turn and leave the moment I arrived. I was a fundraiser at that organization, so in the way of non-profit fundraising, these sorts of daily interactions were punctuated with lunches in fancy restaurants, and visits to extravagant offices, and tickets to show openings. It was a visceral experience of the economic highs and lows any booming city creates.

I've also volunteered in different capacities with local non-profit groups and with the local school district, and for a while, I interacted regularly with the various agencies that serve children in trouble. Much of what happens to Bashkim and much of what Roberta does are rooted in those experiences. And finally, my community college is an economically and culturally diverse place. I teach composition and literature, courses in which the truths of people's lives sometimes surface, and I have many students, so I have lots and lots of access to the various ways that people live and think and work in my town.

What prompted you to write this novel? Can you tell us about the real events you say inspired this story?

I read about the event in the local paper—it was a headline one day, and a midsection story a few times after that—and from the very first, it haunted me. It made me sad, it felt somehow typical of my community, it broke my heart. And so I started working a story around it. I imagined the disconnect between those people in that moment. I have witnessed these disconnects a thousand times in a city that has changed so much, so fast, and that constantly throws together people from different parts of the world—with different traditions, different ideas, different economic means. I developed my own vivid idea of what might have happened, and of how easily that tragedy might have been averted; I just kept wishing that it had been. I decided to write around that event because I thought that if it haunted me, it might haunt a reader too.

“That event was what drove my imagination, but I made a conscious decision only to write about it if I could somehow not leave it simply as a symbol of despair—which in some ways, in my own mind, it was.”

Through the story of eight-year-old Albanian immigrant Bashkim, readers witness the apprehension Americans continue to feel towards immigrants—particularly Islamic immigrants. How did you decide to present that part of the story through the eyes of a little boy?

I was reluctant to try to write in the voice of a child; artistically, it seemed like a fraught choice. But I had decided to use the first person, and I needed a voice that could speak to the central climactic event, and by process of elimination, Bashkim was it. I don't think I worried particularly about the fact that he was Muslim. My world of people is varied, so I wasn't concerned that I had a narrow idea of what it might mean to be an immigrant or a Muslim. I have felt sensitive to the experience of anyone Muslim since 9/11, and as a mother, particularly sensitive to how it has felt to be a Muslim child. I've watched many children, including my own, react to the experience of being seen as a "something" before they are seen as themselves. There's not much positive in that, in my opinion, and for a Muslim child after 9/11, I think that experience has been intense.

The stories of the other three principles—housewife Avis, social worker Roberta, and war veteran Luis—all converge with Bashkim's after a heartbreaking event. What do you hope readers take away from the aftermath?

That event was what drove my imagination, but I made a conscious decision only to write about it if I could somehow not leave it simply as a symbol of despair—which in some ways, in my own mind, it was. Intellectually, I have to fight for even the measured sort of optimism that pervades We Are Called to Rise, but at a deep level, there was no way I was going to put something into this world that might make some reader feel less able to live through the next day. One could say a lot of things about that impulse—wearing my English professor's hat, I could say a lot of things about it—but the bottom line is that I wasn't going to do it. I think living takes guts. Some people are exceptionally lucky (and that makes me happy) and many of us have long periods of luck (and that gives me respite), but there are a lot of ways for life to break a heart, there are a lot of days when beautiful people just hang on and survive by the skin of their teeth, and there was no way, just no way, that I would put something into this world that could make that day worse.

So when I decided to write a story around that event, I committed myself to writing past it, and I fought for what I know to be true: that people are often their most beautiful in response to crisis, and that the generosity of some people is extraordinary. It is as extraordinarily beautiful as the cruelty of some other events is extraordinarily ugly. It rises as high as the other falls low. That's what I'd like a reader to take from this book.

Are there any plans right now for a second novel?

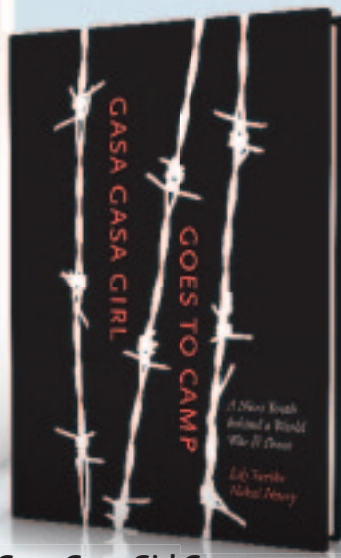

Oh absolutely! It's actually a third, since I have a novel sitting in a closet (which I will someday dust off and see if it merits public view), and I am a good way into that story. It's fully blocked out, in chapters, and I have written my way into each of the four main characters' voices. I have definitely challenged myself to inhabit the minds of people with quite different experiences than my own, and right now, that is going well, but I haven't written enough to be sure it will work. Mostly, I'm longing for the time and space to write the idea out. I work best with long blocks of uninterrupted time—I'm very fast in that environment—but it's hard to get that kind of time. Ordinary (and extraordinary) distractions are making me itch right now: stop, move aside, I have something pressing to do!

Thurston Moore has had a multi-faceted life of 87 years—from a newsboy to the President of Tennessee Players, Inc. Their Multimedia Musical Dramatization, Words of Albert Schweitzer and the Music of Bach, has been presented in more than 160 churches and schools, including a presentation at the The Washington National Cathedral and the world famous Roskilde Domkirke in Denmark.

The New York production featured Dr. Thurman, and mayor Michael R. Bloomberg issued a proclamation stating—"Further establishes Tennessee Players' reputation as one of the nation's most innovative and conscientious arts organizations."

Moore published many books in the music field, covering artists like Frank Sinatra, Rosemary Clooney, and Nat Cole. Over one million copies sold in Country Music alone. In 1972 he received the Jim Reeves Award from the Country Music Academy, presented at the John Wayne Theatre, Knott's Berry Farm, in California.

Foreword (in part)

I am speechless with admiration and delight as I read through Thurston and Georgianna's amazing tale. Their life and many works have been so great and so productive of so much happiness for so many people, I am humbled. The calm and gracious inconceivability of Thurston and Georgianna's story reflects the inconceivability of America, the real America of kind and simple people doing well by doing good. Their story is the story of a couple intertwined into a team, as his Georgianna is always there by his side.

I rejoice in requesting you to welcome them on stage for this journey through their truly "new-renaissance," joyfully creative, quintessentially human lives on this beloved earth. Walk with them and enjoy their heartfelt saga!

M.R. CAREY

THE GIRL WITH ALL THE GIFTS

NOT EVERY GIFT IS A BLESSING . . .

photograph by Michelle Adams

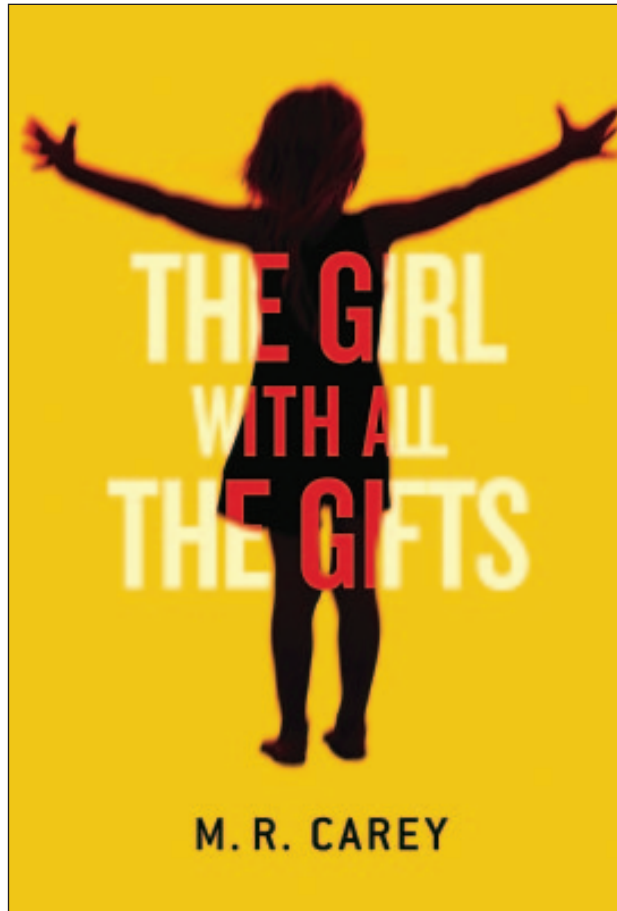

M.R. Carey is a pen name for an established British writer of prose fiction and comic books. He has written for both DC and Marvel, including critically acclaimed runs on X-Men and Fantastic Four. His creator-owned books regularly appear in the New York Times graphic fiction bestseller list. Carey's latest is a fascinating, post-apocalyptic thriller, that has been receiving high praise from such industry giants as John Ajvide Lindqvist, author of Let the Right One In ("A great read that takes hold of you and doesn't let go") and Joss Whedon, creator of Buffy the Vampire Slayer and Firefly ("It left me sighing with envious joy").

Just when you think that nothing new can be done with suspense-filled, post-apocalyptic tales, along comes The Girl with All the Gifts. This is much more a character study than a plot-driven tale. Did you set out to tell a particular story in general, or did Melanie guide you as you wrote?

Melanie was definitely the starting point and the reference point for me all the way through. The novel grew out of a short story that I wrote for a themed anthology—"An Apple For the Creature"—the theme being horror and dark fantasy tales set in schools or with a theme of school days. I said I'd write a story for the book, and then had no idea what I could do with that starting point. I fretted about it on and off for a couple of months, then one day woke up with the idea of Melanie in my mind.

She wasn't Melanie back then, of course. She was just a little girl sitting in a classroom, writing an essay about what she wanted to be when she grew up. And the terrible irony was that all of her dreams and ambitions were going to come to nothing. The reader would know, or would come to discover, that she was never going to grow up.

I wrote the short, and it was well received. In fact, it was nominated for the Edgar Allan Poe and the Derringer short fiction award. But I felt as though Melanie's story had further to go. That was when I pitched it to Orbit as a novel, with the short story being essentially the first act in that structure. Everything else came from that starting point, very organically.

In an interview focusing on your work on Marvel's Ender's Shadow: Battle School #1, you shared your affection for Orson Scott Card's Ender books, stating that part of the appeal of the books is that they deal with "preternaturally intelligent and gifted children who are nonetheless emotionally vulnerable and very convincingly drawn." This sounds like our heroine Melanie. Why do you feel a particular connection with such characters, and what drives you to want to share their stories?

I think I've always been fascinated by family dynamics, and as part of that, with parent-child relationships. Of course there aren't any of those in The Girl With All the Gifts, but a lot of people have said—I think rightly—that the relationship between Helen Justineau and Melanie has something of a mother-daughter feel to it. It's as though Justineau steps into that vacuum in Melanie's life—the complete absence of love and warmth and intimacy—and tries to fill it single-handed. Which is the catalyst for most of what happens in the book.

But with regard to children particularly, I'm pretty sure it was when I had kids of my own that that became an obsession. You can't live with kids, day in and day out, and not be aware of the truth of that old saying about adults just being damaged children. They're lacking in knowledge of the world, obviously, but emotionally they're complete in ways that we're not. And clever kids come to that knowledge of the world from their own peculiar angle, which is enthralling to watch. All three of my kids have given me moments like that—moments when I've been literally stunned by the parallax between their view and mine, and had to admit that theirs is better.

You worked as a teacher for 15 years before you became a comic writer. How did that period of your life inspire this novel, especially the relationship between Melanie and Miss Justineau?

I'm not sure it did, directly. I only ever taught the very top end of the school system, age 16-plus, and then the British equivalent of community college. So I never did the kind of teaching that the teachers at the base do.

“Most fantastic literature—most of the best of it, anyway—isn’t escapist at all . . . it uses its masks and disguises to strip away the inessentials and get straight to the jugular.”

If anything, I was drawing on stuff that went further back than that, on the relationships that I had with teachers when I was a child myself, and they seemed huge and god-like. At the age of eight I was desperately in love with my third-grade teacher, Miss Bimpson. There was nothing physical about it—actually I don’t even remember what she looked like. Neil Gaiman is right when he remarks in The Ocean At the End Of the Lane that for children, beauty is kind of an abstract thing. But I had that crush, that worshipful love for a wise, kind grown-up, and I remember vividly what it feels like.

In real life, of course, a love like that can only be sustained if you don’t know the other person very deeply or for very long. You idealize them, and then you fall in love with that ideal. In the novel, once Melanie starts to see Miss Justineau in other contexts than the classroom, the idealization falters. She doesn’t stop loving her, but being as smart as she is she can’t keep from seeing her clearly.

It’s long been assumed that your Unwritten series was inspired by the Harry Potter novels, when in fact, you’ve stated that your reference point for the comics was Christopher Milne—Christopher Robin of the Winnie the Pooh books. Other than your own past, did you have a specific inspiration for this novel?

Not in the sense of having a particular precursor in mind. In a way, at least part of the inspiration came from watching horror movies with my daughter Louise. Out of the whole family, it’s only me and Lou who do horror. My wife and our sons are way too gentle and civilized for gore and frights. So we’d have to pick our moments, and on the occasions when we got a clear run-up we’d sometimes watch two or three movies back to back.

We were both struck by those moments in horror movies where the horror becomes poignant because you can see the human still surviving within the monster. Like the moment in Land Of the Dead when the zombies are shambling around the bandstand clutching their old musical instruments, which they can no longer remember how to play. I think moments like that were at the back of my mind when I started to write.

Actually, if The Girl With All the Gifts does have a precursor it’s probably Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein. That’s a book with a lot to say about parent-child relationships and class and social divisions in society, and it uses a monster movie narrative as the vehicle. Really a masterpiece. And like Melanie, Frankenstein’s creature is monster and innocent rolled into one.

You’ve worked on so many fabulous projects—from comic books to film scripts to television—and horror and the fantastic play a role in most of them. What is it that fascinates you or drives you to write about these things?

I wish I knew! I think part of it may be that I grew up very poor in an inner-city slum area, and I spent a lot of my waking life wishing I was somewhere else. Escapism was baked into my bones. Once I got a little older, of course, I came to see that most fantastic literature—most of the best of it, anyway—isn’t escapist at all. It talks about real issues and real dilemmas, about the real world, and it uses its masks and disguises to strip away the inessentials and get straight to the jugular. That’s what I aspire to do—and maybe manage to do, at least a little, one time in 10 or so.

What’s next for you? Or, given your expansive body of work, should we say: what won’t you be working on?

I’m deep into the next novel, which I pitched as Dead Man Dancing, but which I’m now thinking of as State Of Grace. It’s coming together very nicely, and I’m at that pleasurable stage when you feel like you’re generating your own gravity and plummeting straight to where you want to go. I’ve also got another novel coming out in June, the second collaboration with my wife Linda and our daughter Louise.

I have three ongoing comic book projects: The Unwritten for DC Vertigo, Suicide Risk for BOOM and Houses Of the Holy for the Madefire app, as well as an X-Men graphic novel, No More Humans, coming out in May.

And I’m doing tons of screenwriting, which is enormously exciting. I’ve written a screenplay for the movie version of The Girl With All the Gifts, as well as a movie adaptation of Jonathan Trigell’s amazing near-future novel, Genus, and I’m currently working on a TV pilot. I’ve been noodling around the edges of that world for ages, and suddenly last year it all seemed to click into focus.

I’m taking a break from radio and game writing, though.
