New from New York Times best-selling author Mark Bittman

Animal, Vegetable, Junk

A History of Food, from Sustainable to Suicidal

“In...his most radical and profound book to date, Bittman brings his trademark wit, precision, and user-friendliness to a sweeping history of sustenance. The result is a joyful and transformational read.”

—Naomi Klein, author of This Changes Everything: Capitalism vs. the Climate

“A must-read for policymakers, activists, and concerned citizens looking to better understand our food system, and how we can fix it.”

—Vice President
Al Gore

“Mark Bittman’s thought-provoking, wide-ranging new book will open your eyes to the crisis facing our food system, and to the world impact of every bite that you eat.”

—Jared Diamond,
Pulitzer-Prize-winning author of Guns, Germs, and Steel, Collapse, and other best-selling books

“Compelling and ambitious, Bittman’s Animal, Vegetable, Junk is the authoritative text on the 1.8 million year history of the food system.... Bittman leaves no stone unturned in the quest to understand how Big Food expropriated our land, water, and sustenance. Everyone who eats needs to read this book. The future of our species and our planet depends on it.”

—Leah Penniman,
Founding Co-Director of Soul Fire Farm and Author of Farming While Black

“This is the perfect book for this moment in time, and Mark is the perfect person to write it.”

So you want more productivity...here's how

Paul F. Ross LSIG
Productivity can be quadrupled or more in all sectors of the world's economies, without asking people to work longer hours or work faster, by making better decisions in awarding pay increases and promotions to new responsibilities. To produce these outcomes, job performance must be validly measured, and decisions must follow in equation-like precision from performance data. 94 pp.

Labor 'Til Deliverance
Beverly Barnes Brown LSIG
Foreword by Melendi Brown
 God's people perish for the lack of knowledge. Christians need more than just hearing a sermon every Sunday, repeating the sinner's prayer, and then thinking that now since they are saved, the enemy (the devil) will leave them alone. God's people have specific issues that need to be specifically addressed. 174 pp.

THE MUST-READ DEBUT OF 2021

Te-Ping Chen's stories vividly give voice to the men and women of modern China and its diaspora.

“Gripping and illuminating . . .

At the heart of Te-Ping Chen's remarkable debut lies a question all too relevant in 21st Century America: What is freedom?”

—JENNIFER EGAN,

Pulitzer Prize-winning author of A Visit from the Goon Squad and Manhattan Beach

“There is a rare brilliance and a feeling of necessity imbued in every word . . .

At each story's end you feel wonderfully more awake, more connected and alive.”

—NANA KWAME ADJEI-BRENYAH,

New York Times-best-selling author of Friday Black

“I will be returning to these stories again, to enjoy them, be consoled by them, and marvel at them.”

—CHARLES YU,

author of the National Book Award-finalist Interior Chinatown

© Lucas Foglia

TE-PING CHEN'S fiction has appeared in The New Yorker, Granta, O Magazine, and the Atlantic. A reporter with the Wall Street Journal, she was previously their correspondent in Beijing and Hong Kong.

PATRICIA ENGEL

Infinite Country

A TIMELESS NOVEL OF FAMILY & DEPORTATION

9781982159467 | $26.00 HC | Avid Reader Press/Simon & Schuster

Engel is the author of The Veins of the Ocean, winner of the Dayton Literary Peace Prize; It's Not Love, It's Just Paris, winner of the International Latino Book Award; and Vida, a finalist for the Pen/Hemingway and Young Lions Fiction Awards, New York Times Notable Book, and winner of Colombia's national book award, the Premio Biblioteca de Narrativa Colombiana. The daughter of Columbian immigrants, and a dual citizen, she teaches creative writing at the University of Miami.

“ Mauro worried he wouldn't have anything to teach a son about how to be a man but at least he could give him a life in this new land...” ”

In Houston, Mauro worked with many men who'd navigated the southern borderlands by foot, some four or five times. They came from different nations, passing through the corridor of the Americas, sometimes intercepted and sent back to their countries within days while others were held for months in camps with no walls, only tarps shielding them from the prickly southwestern sun and frigid night. Still, they returned, even as the journey became harder, the hazards more vicious, convinced this land offered more than theirs had already taken from them. Mauro and Elena arrived under different circumstances, but Mauro knew the consequences were the same if they didn't leave when their visas expired. Without an adjustment or amnesty, a deportation order would come.

As Elena and the baby slept, Mauro held his family's three passports, running his fingers over the dates printed on each visa, Karina's baby photo pressed onto the page. They'd had it taken in a shop near the house in Chapinero. The storeowner droned that she was too tiny to go on a plane and it was unnatural to make an Andean child cross an ocean so soon. He warned she'd acquire an incurable vertigo from breaching their altitude so early in life that would haunt her no matter where she went.

Later, Mauro and Elena laughed about the shopkeeper's insistence. Now he wondered about the baby that was coming. Elena was sure it would be a boy. Mauro didn't know if she said so because she thought it was what he wanted or needed to hear, as if every man felt the primal urge to father a son. He thought of his own father who was no example. Mauro worried he wouldn't have anything to teach a son about how to be a man but at least he could give him a life in this new land rather than drag him back to their pasts, even if it would cost them in ways they could not yet imagine.

At gatherings at the homes of Mauro's co-workers, when the men passed around beers or tequila, or when talking to people from the neighborhood, no matter their country of origin, when asked why they came to this country and stayed they all said the same thing: more opportunity. For themselves, for their children, for their queridos back home whom they were able to support with money earned over here. It became true for Elena and Mauro too. What they earned in one week in Texas was more than what Mauro and Elena made in a month working at the market and her mother's laundry combined. Mauro had no education and Elena didn't make it to university because she was expecting Karina. With a devalued currency, theirs was a country where it felt impossible to get ahead of you weren't born to a certain class, were rich or corrupt, or talented and beautiful enough for fútbol or farándula.

If Mauro and Elena ignored the exit date stamped on their passports, the option of returning to the U.S. would be closed for at least five or ten years at which point they might be able to apply for reentry. That they'd received visas in the first place, without American sponsors and with the quota on Colombians admitted to the country each year, had felt like the intervention of saints. If they stayed, they'd be limited to their existence in North America until it came to its inevitable conclusion. Unless one won the green card lottery but they'd be too scared to apply to take the chance. Political asylum was just as elusive. Coming from a place that gringos regularly stereotyped as a death trap didn't mean they could prove they were unsafe without a documented history of threats. The perils of poverty didn't count, only a demonstrated danger of physical harm. Since they never received letters vowing to kill or dismember their families, they weren't deemed worthy of this government's protection. A good attorney might have been able to argue that even if one was not important enough to be a murder target did not mean you couldn't be killed at any second. But they didn't know how to find one and were warned about con-artist lawyers who preyed on people like them, self-proclaimed miracle workers promising citizenship in a year, who charged upfront then disappeared.

“ Since they never received letters vowing to kill or dismember their families, they weren't deemed worthy of this government's protection. ”

There also existed the possibility of Elena and Mauro seeking citizenship by each marrying other people since they weren't already married to one another. The woman upstairs whose children Elena babysat had married a white Texan for this purpose. They only saw each other for appointments at the immigration office. She'd had to pay a few thousand already and the rest was due in installments, but she never had to have sex with him and already had a green card in hand. The way she described it, marrying someone else as just a matter of paperwork, didn't seem unreasonable to Elena, but Mauro refused to consider it.

They were careful. Scared even to play the radio too loud, not wanting to give anyone a reason to complain. They'd been told immigration officers only arrest people when tipped off. SWAT teams raiding apartment buildings, restaurant kitchens or factories. Bulletproofed and body armored officers with no-knock warrants, storming homes, breaking down doors if needed as if the people inside were planning a bombing or a coup. They might take you away or if you were extremely lucky, let you go with just a warning, but you'd be logged in their books, called for annual check-ins and classified as deportable.

Mauro and Elena could always go home. Their old lives would wait for them. Yet staying under these conditions would prevent them from ever being able to visit Perla without losing the life they were beginning to make here in the north. If they remained without adjusted status, they'd need to dissolve into the population, praying the laws changed, hoping for amnesty or asylum.

Mauro passed time spinning bottles, flipping coins, pulling cards from a deck, searching for signs, a way to make the decision for his family to stay or to go. But there was no card for keeping Elena and her mother apart. No card for a life sentence of uncertainty. No card for forfeiting one country to bet on another. No card for regret.

AMBER RUFFIN & LACEY LAMAR

You'll Never Believe What Happened to Lacey

ABSURD ANECDOTES OF EVERYDAY RACISM

9781538719367 | $28.00 HC | Grand Central Publishing

Author photo credit: Lloyd Bishop

A writer and cast member on NBC's Late Night with Seth Myers, Ruffin became the first Black woman to write for a late-night talk show in American history when she joined the show's staff in 2014. The Amber Ruffin Show is currently available for streaming on Peacock. Lamar is Ruffin's big sister. She works in healthcare and human services, devoting her time to troubled youth for the last 13 years.

“ I know exactly the type of shenanigans folks will pull on a person of color. My lord, have I heard some things. ”

FROM THE PREFACE

Hi!

My sister Lacey is a lightning rod for hilarious racist stories. She's the perfect mix of polite, beautiful, tiny, and Black that makes people think: I can say whatever I want to this woman. And I guess you can. Hey, knock yourself out—but that doesn't mean you won't end up in a book.

I am not exaggerating when I say, “You won't believe what happened to Lacey.” And I'm hard to impress. My name is Amber Ruffin. I grew up with my big sister Lacey, our mom, dad, two other sisters, and one brother in Omaha, Nebraska. I know exactly the type of shenanigans folks will pull on a person of color. My lord, have I heard some things. But my feeble stories never come close to the hilarity that befalls Lacey on a near daily basis.

I moved away from Omaha many years ago and now I work in New York City, where I write comedy. Everyone I work with is stark raving normal. We don't have any crazy bigots (dumb enough to run up) and I'm no one's first Black friend. Now, I'm not saying no one ever says anything crazy to me—I'm still a Black woman in America—it's just that we all know there are consequences for talking to me as if you've lost your mind. So I've forgotten, more or less, the constant flow of racism one must endure to live in the Midwest and be the only Black person at work. It is an unchecked tsunami of dumb questions and comments. You're expected to walk people through every aspect of Blackness. You become the ambassador of Blackovia. People think it's your job to answer every dumb “Why can't I (insert the most nonsense shit you've ever heard)? Is it because I'm white?” I call this process “dragging white people into the light,” and it's something I don't do anymore.

This is Lacey. My little sister, Amber, is spoiled and has forgotten the 1970s-esque social blindspot she's left me in.

Don't get me wrong, I'm glad that she's gotten to move away from Omaha to New York, where someone would get fired for out-and-out racism. I love that that really happens. Never seen it, but I love it. Like Santa Claus. I've seen movies about it, heard people talk about it. I understand it's normal for a lot of people, but it would be like having a zebra in your living room for me. I would not believe my eyes.

Twice a week, I get a text from my sister that says, “Can you talk?” It's my favorite because I know I'm about to be transported to a place that exists in real life and fantasy: the place where coworkers will put their whole hand in your hair, talking 'bout “It's fluffy like a dog.” I realize this sounds terrible, but it's like watching Dateline. You can't believe it was the GIRLFRIEND who killed the HUSBAND! It's the edge of reality. Technically, it happens, but it is barely plausible. Excited, I steal away to the elevator banks at work and listen to Lacey tell me a new horror story. It's fantastic. As I stand there, mouth agape, listening to some new fresh hell, I am always struck by the fact that these stories will only exist in this phone call. Some will go on to become stories once the topic turns to “racist people at work” one night when Lacey is hanging out with her friends, but she'll forget most of them because of the sheer volume. The. Sheer. Volume.

Now, I understand all of this sounds harsh, but you have to know that this is not a book full of sad stories. The previous paragraph was the saddest it will get for a while. Black people hear stories like these so frequently that it takes a lot for it to start to hurt our feelings. We have all been through it. But, dare I say, you ain't been through it like Lacey. Black readers will read these stories and feel that really good, yet terrible feeling of going through something bad and realizing you're not alone, and not only that, but that someone else has it worse! And, hopefully, the white reader is gonna read this, feel sad, think a little about it, feel like an ally, come to a greater understanding of the DEPTH of this type of shit, and maybe walk away with a different point of view of what it's like to be a Black American in the twenty-first century.

Hence this book.

Melinda Bybee

The Night the Midwife Came to Call

A tried-and-true, dedicated midwife who loves babies, Melinda Bybee, had already assisted many mothers in giving a natural birth at home since 1974 until 2003. She has an exceptional zeal in helping out mothers not only around her neighborhood but also to anywhere she is into. Her passion has started when a friend of hers in a Congregation had an earnest request to have a home birth. At that time, it was rare to have a home birth. So she is the one who assisted in the whole labor and up to the birth occasion. She has even studied for eight months about natural birth to be fully equipped on the process. After this, she has gone through nursing school and then pursued studying midwifery for three years and got her permit afterwards as another couple wanted a home birth. This wonderful turn of events has set her life for 32 more years. She has helped different couples deliver over a thousand babies; two sets of twins and three breeches including all of her five grandchildren.

Penny Johnson's Legacy

Jane Penny Johnson

Poetry is the song that poets sing to beautify the world. In A Penny for Your Thoughts, contemporary American poet Penny Johnson presents verses about nature, love, life, death, philosophy, and religion. She considers American life in the present day. With her writing, she hopes to teach, fulfill, entertain, heal wounds, and show the beauty of the world. Johnson offers her work as a gift to anyone longing for the uplifting and nourishing experience that poetry can provide. This poetry collection explores a wide range of themes and seeks to provide inspiration and satisfaction while enhancing the natural splendor of the world. The Healing Power of Your Aura
 How to Use Spiritual Energy for Physical Health and Well-Being

BY INTERNATIONALLY ACCLAIMED AURA EXPERT

 with DIMITRI MORAITIS
 From Spiritual Arts Institute

“Utterly fascinating and of great value for both its profound analysis of the hidden causes of illness as well as the simple, yet powerful spiritual healing techniques.”

--Richard Gerber, M.D., author of Vibrational Medicine: The #1 Guide to Subtle-Energy Therapies

Benjamin Franklin Book Award Winner

With remarkable insight and clarity, Barbara demonstrates how your aura is the spiritual support system to your physical body, with specific healing meditations for more than 80 types of physical conditions from headaches to cancer.

With generous full-color illustrations, this easy-to-read guidebook explores:

- What health and illness look like in the aura, including auras of organs and cells
- Extraordinary details on the chakra system and its part in healing
- The single biggest cause of illness and how to counteract it
- Keys to identifying the spiritual roots of physical distresses such as how disappointment can cause a heart attack and frustration can cause liver disorders
- How to relieve stress, and boost your vitality

AIN'T NEVER NOT BEEN BLACK
 JAVON JOHNSON

$16.00
 October 13, 2020
 9781943735846

Ain't Never Not Been Black foregrounds Black pleasure Black pain and Black love in unflinchingly Black ways. Engaging with themes of masculinity, racism, love, and joy, Johnson is at once critical and creative. His spoken word performance transfers effortlessly to the page, with poems that will encompass you.

This is a book about blackness and survival, and how in America these are inseparable. In a world of individualism, who can you hold close? In a world of danger, what makes you feel safe?

“We both know it’s not about whether or not the shooter is racist—it’s about how poor Black boys are treated as problems well before we are treated as people.”

In his stunningly intimate, highly anticipated follow up to Helium (9781943735198), Rudy Francisco has created a collection of poems that savor the day-to-day, treating it as worship, turning it into an opportunity to plant new seeds of growth.

Using fascinating metaphors to convey common emotional states these poems are an act of remembrance, and an act of believing that you dear reader, are a celebration waiting for the lights to come up.

“To be honest, getting out of bed has become a magic trick, and I am probably the worst magician I know.”

NATIONAL SHRINE OF THE DIVINE MERCY

A PILGRIMAGE IN PHOTOS

The National Shrine of The Divine Mercy: A Pilgrimage in Photos, by Theresa Peloquin beautifully showcases the breathtaking grounds of Eden Hill in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, home of the National Shrine of The Divine Mercy, which was built in thanks for the mercy of God. Whether as a souvenir or as a virtual pilgrimage, let these photos speak to your heart about all the Lord has done for His Church through the message and devotion of Divine Mercy.
