Introduce Students to Literary Titans

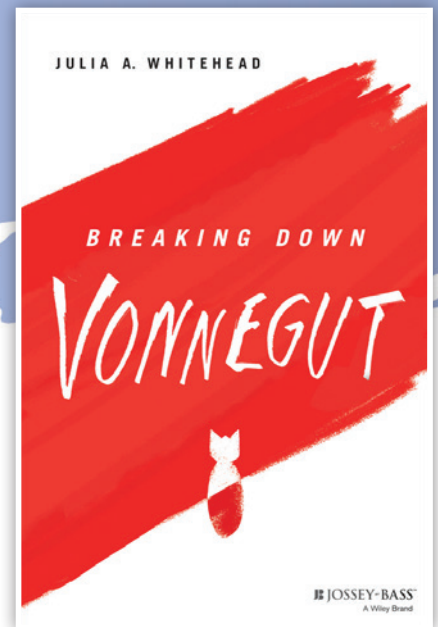

The Breaking Down series provides middle and secondary students with an overview of authors' lives and investigates the composition, characters, themes, symbols, language, and motifs in their work and their relation to contemporary society. As readers explore the literary and cultural context of the works, they develop a firm appreciation of the authors' roles in modern literature.

SELECTIONS

Gail

Cold Enough for Snow

Jessica Au
9780811231558, $16.95
New Directions Publishing Corporation

Au's second novel has won the Novel Prize, a new biennial award for a book-length work of literary fiction written in English. The prize is sponsored by New Directions, Fitzcarraldo Editions, and Giramondo. Here, a mother and daughter come from abroad to travel together in Tokyo. Their conversations are at once quotidian and elliptical. A moving, quietly beautiful novel.

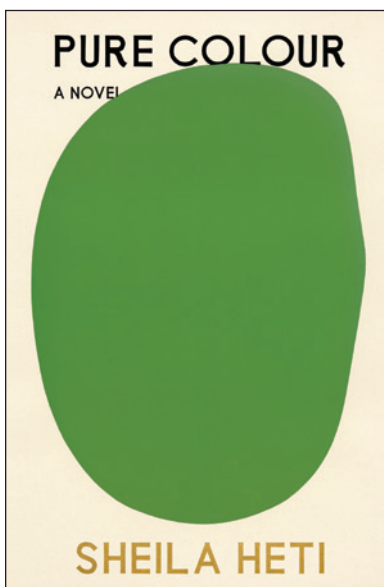

Bridgett

Don't Say We Didn't Warn You

Ariel Delgado Dixon
9780593243503, $27.00
Random House

Dixon's debut novel is about the heartbreaking journey of two sisters. These women continue to suffer from the trauma endured as teenagers.

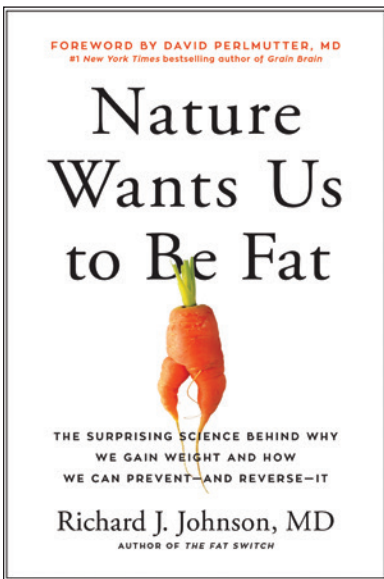

Cassie

Pure Colour

Sheila Heti
9780374603946, $26.00
Farrar, Straus and Giroux

I cannot wait to get my hands on this new book, supposedly a galaxy of a novel: explosive, celestially bright, huge, and streaked with beauty. Heti is a writer that opens my eyes while at the same time making my own modern experiences feel seen and heard. She is a brave writer, constantly reimagining what fiction can look like and what it should be.

Nature Wants Us to Be Fat

Richard Johnson, M.D.
Foreword by David Perlmutter
9781637740347, $26.95
Benbella Books

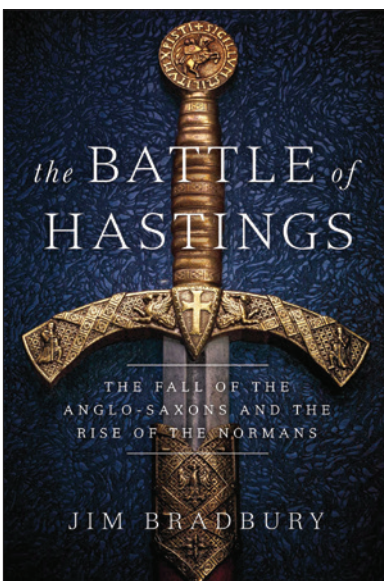

Nature has equipped us with a “survival switch” to protect us from starvation. Unfortunately, many of our survival switches are stuck in “on” mode—leading to obesity along with diseases both physical and behavioral. In this book, Dr. Johnson explains the science behind the survival switch and what you can do to turn your switch off to treat and prevent obesity and to reduce the risk of developing disease.

Represent!

Christian Cooper
Alitha Martinez, illustrator
9781779514196, $24.99
DC Comics

This is a collection of digital first series by new creators of comics who have been traditionally underrepresented in the mainstream comic book medium. Topics cover social change, diversity, and the importance of justice. The innovative styles and compelling stories examine how our culture builds understanding and evolves in the pursuit of a more just and compassionate world.

Travis

The Battle of Hastings

Jim Bradbury
9781643139449, $17.95
Pegasus Books

In 1066, everything changed for the English-speaking world. The Battle of Hastings signaled the end to Anglo-Saxon rule. Bradbury presents the Normans and their effective conquest of the Anglo-Saxons that would eventually lead to the ascension of William, Duke of Normandy, to William the Conqueror as King of England. This battle was a key moment in history where we have a departure from the Old English language into what is known as Middle English. This was mainly due to the influence of the French speaking Normans. This book is for anyone who is interested in English history and the military might of both sides of this epic battle.

Introduction by Zadie Smith

In this 1983 short story, readers meet Twyla and Roberta, who have known each other since they were eight years old. Morrison described the work as a story which will keep readers thinking for years to come, as an experiment in the removal of all racial codes from a narrative about two characters of different races for whom racial identity is crucial. 96 pp. (Fiction - General)

Treasured How Tutankhamun Shaped a Century

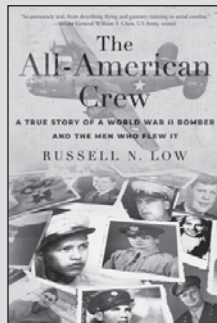

Christina Riggs PUBA
In 1922, Howard Carter and his team of fellow archeologists came upon a set of steps hidden deep under debris, in Egypt's Valley of the Kings. The path led them to a burial room, still perfectly intact, with three tombs including that of a young boy, the 18-year-old Egyptian royal, King Tut. The discovery of the 3,300-year-old tomb turned the boy-king into a household name overnight. 432 pp.

For 150 years as a British colony, Hong Kong was a beacon of prosperity. When the territory was handed over to China in 1997, Deng Xiaoping promised that to ensure stability, it would remain highly autonomous for 50 years. But as the halfway mark of the SAR's lifespan approaches in 2022, it is clear that China has not kept its word. 320 pp.

War & the Dead

Selected Works of Ambrose Bierce

Foreword by David Rose

LHTH

Ambrose Bierce: journalist, veteran, legend, was as familiar with death as could be a writer of his time. Whether consulting tribulations experienced in the American Civil War, or pulling onto pages tales of ghosts and murder, the short story master and acclaimed satirist blazed a trail for writers of the macabre. Here, and perhaps for the first time made clear, the link between his veteranhood and his dark themes is explored. 260 pp. 978-1-73766-863-3

The Scandal of Christmas

Advent Reflections on Four Unlikely Figures

Dr. William B. Coker, Sr.

NEHP

Ann L. Coker, editor

Foreword by Rev. Dr. William B. Coker, Jr.

Amid all the familiar trappings of the Christmas season, it is easy to miss the fact that the story of the incarnation of Christ is one of the most unlikely, inconceivable, and scandalous things God has done. And yet, God did choose ordinary, unimpressive people to play starring roles in one of the greatest miracles of all times: the Incarnation. 92 pp.

A Theology of Genocide?

Reading Deuteronomy 20

Anthony Milner

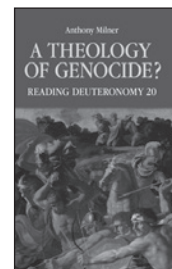

SFEX

In this penetrating study, Milner begins by asking if Deuteronomy 20:17-18 has been used to justify genocidal violence. He then considers how such texts have been understood, demonstrating that most readers have taken the passage allegorically, as a metaphor for the interior struggle against sin. 346 pp.

DOLLY PARTON & JAMES PATTERSON

Run Rose Run

A NOVEL OF DANGER & DESIRE

97800759554344 | $30.00 | Little, Brown and Company

Author Photo Credit: Courtesy of Dolly Parton

Singer, songwriter, actress, producer, businesswoman, and philanthropist Parton is the composer of more than 3,000 songs, has sold more than 100 million records worldwide, and has given away millions of books to children through her nonprofit, Dolly Parton's Imagination Library. Patterson is the world's bestselling author and has produced more enduring fictional heroes than any other novelist alive.

“ AnnieLee Keyes looked barely older than a teenager, but she sang as though she'd lived for ninety-nine years and seen tragedy in each one of them. ”

It was open-mic night at the Cat's Paw, which meant that everyone and her in-laws had come out to get their six minutes in the spotlight. And if Ruthanna Ryder had known this in advance, she'd have thought twice about showing up.

"Boo!" said a voice right near her ear.

Ruthanna socked her guitarist in the arm without even looking. "Ethan Blake, don't scare a lady," she said. "Sit down and have a drink." She gave him a sidelong glance. "Where's your crush? Don't tell me she's immune to your charms."

"Shh," he said. "She's on."

Oh, Lordy, Ruthanna thought. This is going to be painful.

"It's nice to be back here," she was saying. "I'm AnnieLee Keyes, and I'm kinda new in town." She tapped on the beat-up instrument she held in her lap. "This here is the Cat's Paw, um, community guitar. It's got old strings and slippery pegs, so it doesn't always like to stay in tune. But the two of us'll do our best for you tonight."

As AnnieLee began to strum her intro, Ruthanna could hear how dull the strings sounded, and she quickly decided to get a better instrument sent to the bar tomorrow. She was wondering whether she should get a Martin or a Gibson—or maybe a Taylor?—when the girl opened her mouth and started singing. And Ruthanna sat up and started paying attention.

Dark night, bright future Like the phoenix from the ashes, I shall rise again

The girl's voice was a honey-colored soprano, clear and luminous. Where did this girl come from? AnnieLee Keyes looked barely older than a teenager, but she sang as though she'd lived for ninety-nine years and seen tragedy in each one of them.

And yet that voice of hers wasn't sad. It was strong, and it was wise.

When she started a new song with a quicker tempo, her voice became a roar rather than a trill. Ethan was right. She did sing like an angel—and like a devil, too. Underneath that sweet, doll-faced exterior, there was something fierce and furious about AnnieLee Keyes. Some dark pain powered those pipes; Ruthanna was sure of it.

She'd seen more than a lifetime's worth of brilliant, accomplished professional musicians, but this girl was a natural.

It took one to know one.

When AnnieLee finished her set and went to the bar for her celebratory club soda, Billy waved her off. "You can have your drink at the back table," he said. "Somebody wants to meet you."

AnnieLee straightened up instantly. "Oh!" she said. "They do, do they? Well, for your information, I'm not going to just go sit down with some random stranger just 'cause he wants me to."

"It's not 'some random stranger,'" said Billy. "It's Ruthanna Ryder."

She slipped off her stool, and Billy began to steer her through the crowd. "She's a hell of a lot ornerier than your average fairy godmother, but that woman can work all kinds of miracles."

Billy gave her a gentle shove and then they broke through a knot of people to find themselves standing in front of a small battered table, in the very back corner of the bar, where the biggest star in Nashville was sitting, clicking her nails on the rim of a martini glass.

Perfumed and painted, with smoky eyes and candy-red lips and her spectacular hair coiffed in studiously messy curls, Ruthanna Ryder was so dazzling that AnnieLee gasped.

“Perfumed and painted, with smoky eyes and candy-red lips... Ruthanna Ryder was so dazzling that AnnieLee gasped.”

As Ruthanna extended a slender arm, gesturing for AnnieLee to sit, her beaded dress reflected the colored lights dripping down from the ceiling. “Damned if I don’t look like a disco ball in here,” she said, almost to herself.

“Ruthanna,” Ethan said to the glittering queen beside him, “I’d like you to meet AnnieLee Keyes. AnnieLee, this is Ruthanna Ryder.”

At first AnnieLee could only nod, but a moment later, a torrent of words came rushing out of her mouth before she could stop them. “I pinched myself already, but I still think I might be dreaming. It is such an honor to meet you, Ms. Ryder. I’ve looked up to you since I was old enough to know anything.” She felt her cheeks growing hot, but she kept on going. “We had a poster of you in the kitchen, right next to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and I thought you were one of the saints! I figured you had to be, to sing like that. I even prayed to you. I was about seven years old when my mom finally had to tell me that while your talents were divine, you weren’t actually holy.”

Ruthanna laughed. “I am far from holy, AnnieLee.” Her speaking voice was rich, and lower than AnnieLee had thought it would be.

“You’re a very talented girl,” she said. “I’ve been in this business for over forty years, and I’ve seen more singers than I’ve seen Sundays. But honestly, you stand out, AnnieLee Keyes. You’ve really got something special.”

AnnieLee’s heart swelled with relief and gratitude. “Thank you,” she whispered. “That means the world to me.”

“I don’t do this very often,” Ruthanna said, “but I’m going to help you out.”

AnnieLee’s life had been so hard. Was it crazy to think that this one thing might be easy? She could feel the huge, wild smile spreading across her face.

But Ruthanna didn’t smile back. She pointed one perfect, blood-red nail at AnnieLee’s heart. “Here’s my advice for you, AnnieLee Keyes,” she said. “Get the hell out of Nashville while you still can.”

AnnieLee swallowed. “Pardon me?” she gasped.

“It’s a hard, rough business,” said Ruthanna. “A tiny thing like you? You’ll get chewed up and spit out like a hunk of gristle. Sure, you might taste success, but you’re more likely to end up broke and alone. Do something sensible with your life, AnnieLee. Get a job. Find a man and marry him.”

Elation turned to dismay, just like that. AnnieLee had to remind herself to breathe. Next, though, she had to remind herself who she was.

Can I fix it?

No I cain’t

But I sure ain’t gonna take it lyin’ down

Steeling herself, she spoke slowly and calmly to her idol. “I admire you more than anyone else on this whole green earth,” AnnieLee said, “but with all due respect, Ms. Ryder, you can go screw yourself.”

PIGNON SCORBION

& THE BARBERSHOP DETECTIVES

The year is 1910, and in the small and seemingly sleepy English municipality of Haxford, there's a new chief police inspector. At first, the dapper and unflappable Pignon Scorbion strikes something of an odd figure among the locals, but it isn't long before Haxford finds itself very much in need of a detective.

Luckily, Scorbion and the local barber are old acquaintances, and the barbershop employs a cast of memorable characters who are nothing less than enthralled by the enigmatic new chief police inspector. Investigating a trio of crimes whose origins span three continents and half a century, Pignon Scorbion and his "tonorial sleuths" interview a parade of interested parties. But just as it seems nothing can derail Scorbion's cool head and almost unerring nose for deduction, in walks Thelma Smith—dazzling, whip-smart, and newly single. Has Pignon Scorbion finally met his match?

Black Boy Smile

THE STORY OF A BLACK BOY WHO HEALED

9780306924002 | $27.00 | Legacy Lit

Author Photo Credit: Shaun Champion ©2021

Watkins is the New York Times-bestselling and award-winning author of The Beast Side, The Cook Up, and We Speak for Ourselves, which was a One Book, one Baltimore selection. Editor at Large for Salon, he is also featured in the HBO documentary The Slow Hustle and a writer on We Own the City, an HBO miniseries from David Simon.

CHAPTER 2

Dad held the door open with one hand, allowing me to walk first into the cloudy two-bedroom unit. Lanky black silhouettes floated in and out of the bedroom, delivering handshakes, high fives, and a barrage of “Hey Lil D,” “Aye Lil Dwight.” We were supposed to be headed to the circus the next day, and I needed to keep an eye on him, to make sure he wasn’t out too late or drank too much, or whatever else could happen to mess up our plans. I had been seeing the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey commercials on television all week—the elephants, the monkeys, the flying acrobats, the magic. It was the best sh I ever saw in my life, and I never knew a person that had attended a real circus before. This was my chance, we could be the first to witness the glory of Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey. I just had to go.

“Go in that room with the rest of the little b*stards,” Dad said, his gold tooth gleaming in the dim light. He pointed to the other bedroom down the hall, on the other side of the apartment. “I’ll call you when I’m ready.”

““ Everyone else disappears around my father, but he’s not a ham, he doesn’t try to outshine anyone, he just does. ””

I walked down the hall, stepping over soiled clothes, toys, and other items scattered across the floor. Inside the room, there were a bunch of kids, eight- and ten-year-old boys, piled up in front of huge thirty-inch color TV. “Huge” because the little round bubble screen was encased in the center of about eighty pounds of wood that stood taller than us. Our dark skin was wrapped in the blue TV light. It was my homie’s Fat Nick’s house, and his mom’s bedroom held one of the nicest big screens in the neighborhood, the best I’d ever seen. They were playing Mike Tyson’s Punch Out!! game.

“Gimme the joystick, b*tch!” my cousin Bunk yelled at Nick. “It’s my go!” I found an empty space on the bed next to him.

Bunk grabbed Nick’s plump neck and squeezed hard enough where we could see swirly welts coming through his skin. He cuffed his teeth, dragged him across the floor, and pried the joystick out of his hands. Nick rushed back at him, but Bunk knocked him back. Nick threw an Etch A Sketch at his head.

Bunk picked it back up and started to beat Nick with it. I had to stop it. “Yo, that’s enough!” I said, pinning Bunk against the wall. “They gonna make us cut the game off.”

Nick wanted a second chance because he’d lost to Glass Joe, the weakest character on the game. He probably should’ve gotten a second chance because we were in his house, in his mom’s bedroom, playing his Nintendo—but it was Bunk’s turn and he was far from the weakest person in the room. “Give me back the game, I’m not done!” Nick continued. Everyone was laughing.

“Shut the fk up back there!” one of the grown-ups from the kitchen yelled over the music. We all looked at each other. Sick of being around fighting kids, I leaped off the bed and followed the music and smoke and chicken fumes back down the hallway.

Every Friday night the adults got together in Nick’s kitchen for card games—Spades, Tonk, Pinochle, or all three. There was loud music and a lot of smoke, weed, cigarettes, and burned incense. Nick’s mom always fried chicken. I can’t remember her not frying chicken. Just two minutes or thirty seconds in their apartment and you’d instantly smell like the Colonel, even if you’d bathed in cologne like Dad.

“Game over, fua!” Dad yelled, leaping up from his folding chair, his voice bouncing off the walls. “Pay me, lil nia! Pay me!”

Dad is always the biggest personality in a room, even building, even when surrounded by the biggest personalities. He’s the loudest, the yellowest, with the biggest smile, and biggest laugh—his presence easily touches all four corners of a space as soon as he enters. Everyone else disappears around my father, but he’s not a ham, he doesn’t try to outshine anyone, he just does.

“Y’all taking all the food out my kids’ mouth, I’m gettin’ it all back!” he yelled, laughing, smiling, sitting right in the center of the table. “You better come eat some of this burnt-ass chicken, Lil Dwight, this might be ya last meal in a while, if I don’t make this money back.”

The party table shook with laughter.

"I don't want no fin' chicken," I said. The table laughed more. Grown-ups loved me cursing, they thought it was the funniest thing in the world. "F that chicken!"

"Don't cuss at me, you little motherer," Dad yelled back over the laughter.

"Make a plate!" Dad said, shuffling his cards, "We ain't stoppin' to get food if ya little ass get hungry later on!"

I grab Cheetos out of a flowery bowl and dump them onto a paper towel. I'm licking the orange dust off of my fingers when my uncle Angelo springs from the living room. "Watch out!" He places me into a headlock on the couch.

He stands up and playfully starts bobbing and weaving to show me how to put up my guard. "Stay ready!"

I face him, tiny hands protecting my face, and he quickly pokes at my ribs. "You better be ready for the court!" He always says that. With glossy eyes and a ball cap, he starts to throw imaginary crossovers and perfect his hook-shot form. I pretend to block his shots.

"Man, y'all take that goofy basketball shit outside!" Dad yells from the card game.

"You got any little girlfriends yet?" my uncle Big Lo asks.

"Yeah, I got two! They both like me!"

He laughs and gives me a high five. "Two ain't enough, you should have four!"

"Already a lil heartbreaker, justtttttt like his faaa-tha!" a woman with a round smile from the card game says through the smoke.

He's a tough act to follow, but I try. Dad is handsome by definition. Women and even little girls my age love him. At five foot ten, he's stylish and generously pours into everyone around him, sharing his money, his time, and his liquor. Everywhere we go, everyone loves him.

"You better make sure you can keep them all happy," Dad chuckles.

When Dad's drunk his loud mouth is even louder, his eyes are sleepy, and he laughs so hard that I want a sip. I want to laugh like him. Purple Crown Royal bags were everywhere that he went and could be found all around the house. I kept my money in them, toys; they were my pencil bags for school; they were stuffed in the kitchen drawer like recycled shopping bags, Mom's knickknacks filled some of them, my cousins' fingernail polish, Dad had one full of rubbers—basically it felt like everybody in our family had unlimited Crown Royal bags because of Dad and my uncles. Crown Royal was like Red Rooster hot sauce, Newport cigarettes, and petroleum jelly—they were in everybody's house.

"Jump been losing all night," Clarence said, looking over his huge glasses, adjusting his Kangol, and shaking his head, "Y'all ain't going to no fin' circus! He probably gonna be headed home with no shoes on. You gonna loan your dad some money?"

"I won't need a loan, sh!" Dad said, his cards close to his face. "If I said we are going to the circus, we are going to the motherin' circus!"

A collage of crinkled ones, fives, and twenties were spread across the kitchen table, making a faded green trail around the red cold cups, cigarette-butt-packed ashtrays, and plastic chip bowls.

"Circus money," one of the ladies snickered.

"Deal me in next hand," Big Lo shouted, headed toward the bathroom. "I'm takin' some circus money too!"

Dad had been promising a trip to the circus all week, and now we aren't going? I made myself into a ball on the couch. Their stupid card game meant more to me than it ever had. I watched them shuffle the cards around the table, their yelling, rolling up, snorting, the sweaty women folding bills into triangles and stuffing them into their bras. They all kept running in and out of the bathroom. Their records never stopped spinning—Aretha Franklin, Frankie Beverly, Luther, and "Solid as a Rock" over and over again. It felt like their game would go on forever, and it did, until all the smoke weighed on my eyelids and I dozed off.

"Get up!" Dad said, tickling me, as the sun hit my face. "Boy, let's go get you a new sweatsuit and some tennis shoes, we gonna be at the circus all day!"

I opened my eyes to his wide smile. He was holding a stack of money thicker than an AT&T phone book.

A Front-Row Seat to the American Stage at the Birth of a New World

Acclaimed historian and New York Times-bestselling author Shirley delivers a compelling account of 1945, particularly the watershed events in April, that details how America emerged from World War II as a leading superpower.

The long-awaited follow-up to the widely praised December 1941 paints a vivid portrait of America—her people, faith, economy, government, and culture. The year transformed the country into an arsenal of democracy, one that no longer armed the world by necessity but protected the world by need.

Florence Williams explores the fascinating, cutting-edge science of heartbreak while seeking creative ways to mend her own.

For readers of Wild and Lab Girl, Heartbreak is a remarkable merging of science and self-discovery that will change the way we think about loneliness, health, and what it means to fall in and out of love.

“A gripping story of courage, sex, and adventure packed with all the newest hard science on romance and attachment...a magnificent, wise and remarkable read!”

—Helen Fisher, author of Anatomy of Love

“Whoever has felt the blistering heat of a broken heart will thank Florence Williams for a clear moving river of discoveries.”

—Terry Tempest Williams, author of Erosion

“Florence Williams has taken the most common form of psychic pain—heartbreak, her heartbreak—and transformed it into a meditative masterwork.”

—Deborah Copaken, author of Ladyparts
