 THOMAS & MERCER

Soon to be a Major Motion Picture!

From the bestselling author of Me Before You and The Peacock Emporium

In Depression-era America, five extraordinary women embark on a remarkable journey through the mountains of Kentucky and beyond. Based on a true story rooted in America's past, The Giver of Stars is unparalleled in its scope. At times funny, at others heartbreaking, this is a richly rewarding novel of women's friendship, of true love, and of what happens when people reach beyond their grasps for the great beyond.

SELECTIONS

Mary

Be More Leia

Christian Blauvelt
9781465478979, $9.99
DK Publishing

A novelty Star Wars book that shares the wisdom of Princess Leia and other characters from the movie franchise. Includes quotes, witticisms, and photographs. A must-have for the Star Wars collector.

Tyler

American Hangman

Col. French L. MacLean,
U.S. Army (Ret)
9780764358159, $29.99
Schiffer Publishing

Includes a biography of one of the most interesting characters ever to serve in the armed forces as well as fascinating, albeit morbid, accounts and photos of military executions during and after WWII.

Bridgett

Life Undercover

Amaryllis Fox
9780525654971, $26.95
Knopf Publishing Group

Prior to 2010, Fox spent 10 years fighting terrorism as a covert CIA operative. Her memoir of that time reads like a spy adventure novel. The author provides comment and analysis on global television news channels. In 2018 she married Robert F. Kennedy III.

Cassie

Me & Other Writing

Marguerite Duras
9781948980029, $16.00
Dorothy, a Publishing Project

The yearly autumn releases from Dorothy never fail to delight, and this one is deeply anticipated by devoted readers of the press and of Marguerite Duras. I cannot wait to get my hands on this collection of nonfiction. Don't trust me though, trust the author herself who once said, "People who say they don't like their own books, if such people exist, do so because they haven't learned to resist the attraction of humiliation. I love my books. They interest me."

Dann

Synapse

Steven James
9780785225256, $16.99
Thomas Nelson

From the national bestselling master thrill-weaver comes a tale ahead of its time...30 years in the future. A.I. has developed to the point that cognizant robots called "Artificials" live with humans. Terrorist attacks, counterterrorism, A.I. asking questions about more than just facts, Synapse promises to be a winner. A "Thriller Awards" category head judge stated that out of the hundreds of thrillers he's recently read from major ABA publishers, Synapse outshines them all!

Gail

Józef Czapski

Eric Karpeles
9780500023044, $65.00
Thames & Hudson

I had never heard of this Polish artist, so when this book was presented, I became more and more curious about his life and work. He was a prisoner of war after the Katyn Massacre of 1940, exiled to Paris, and was a prolific writer as well as painter. Fascinating life and fascinating paintings!

Find Balance and Contentment in Life

Celebrity culture drives people to aspire to be like the few who seem to have figured out how to have it all. But is it possible that they simultaneously have everything and nothing at all? Having treated some of the world's most successful people, the author—a psychotherapist—sets out to answer why so many people who have everything end up feeling like their achievements are never enough—as well as what that pattern can reveal about people and the society in which they live.

Archives of Memories Poems of a World War II Survivor

Yefim Medvedovskiy

LSIG

The author, as a little boy from three to six years old, survived the entire 900 days of Siege of Leningrad. His subsistence was only possible through the self-sacrifice of his mother. He endured merciless starvation, the unheated walls amidst the cruel Russian winter, and endless lines just to obtain drinking water. These powerful impressions ultimately transformed into emotional poetry. 318 pp.

Life for a child entering teenage years can be rough, especially if there's a 50 percent chance that they're carrying a mutated virus. Madeline Monreal, a biochemist, narrates her story several years after the initial virus outbreak. She recalls her days in high school during this post-apocalyptic era where life has been restored to normal, except for the kids carrying a mutated virus which can turn them into the undead. 282 pp.

ANN PATCHETT

The Dutch House

A DARK FAIRY TALE OF FAMILY TIES

9780062963673 | $27.99 HC | Harper

Patchett is the author of seven novels and three works of nonfiction. She is the winner of the PEN/Faulkner Award, England's Orange Prize, and the Book Sense Book of the Year, and was named one of Time magazine's 100 Most Influential People in the World. She is the co-owner of Parnassus Books in Nashville, Tennessee.

“ The girls were standing in the low waves with their buckets looking for bits of sea glass when...we heard Andy Gilbert’s scream. ”

Just because I didn’t practice medicine didn’t mean my being a doctor never came up. There were plenty of times as the children grew that what I’d learned all those years before was hauled into service. For example, the time we drove the station wagon to Brighton Beach with the Gilbert family, friends we’d made through the kids because that’s how people make friends at a certain time in life, and Andy, the Gilbert boy, put a nail through his foot. The nail was in a board, the board was half-buried in the sand, I didn’t see it happen. The boys were coming out of the water, chasing each other. I was down the beach with Andy’s father, a wiry public defender named Chuck, and the two girls, one of them his and one of them mine. The girls were standing in the low waves with their buckets looking for bits of sea glass when, over the sound of the ocean and the wind and all the other kids horsing around and yelling, we heard Andy Gilbert’s scream. Celeste and the boy’s mother were much closer in, lying on their towels talking, keeping an eye out for the boys while they swam. We all ran towards Andy at once: fathers, mothers, sisters. He must have been around nine, he was Kevin’s friend and Kevin was nine that summer. The boy’s mother, a beautiful woman with straight brown hair and a red two-piece (I’m sorry to say I remember that fact while forgetting her name) was reaching down for her son’s foot without any idea of what she was going to do about it, when Celeste put a hand on her shoulder and said, “No, let Danny.”

The woman, the other mother, looked at my wife and then at me, no doubt wondering what I knew about taking nails out of people’s feet. We had just reached them when our son Kevin said to his screaming, crucified friend, “It’s okay, my dad’s sort of a doctor.”

And in that second when the Gilberts were still stunned by confusion and fear, I put a foot on either side of Andy’s foot to hold the board in place, got the tips of my fingers between the soft meat of his instep and the board, and lifted up very fast. He screamed, of course he screamed, but there wasn’t too much blood so at least he hadn’t sliced an artery. I picked him up, howling and shivering in the heat, slick from the ocean, and started walking to the car in the blinding afternoon sun while the rest of the group scrambled to gather up our day at the beach. Chuck Gilbert came behind me, picking up the board to keep some other child from making the same mistake. Or maybe it was the lawyer’s impulse towards the collection of evidence, as my impulse had been the removal of the nail.

That night at the dinner table, May could not stop telling us the story of our day. I had thought we should drive back into the city and go to the hospital there, but the Gilberts were worried about getting stuck in traffic, and so we wound up in an emergency room in Brooklyn, all of us sitting there, tired and gritty with sand. The ER doctor gave Andy a tetanus shot and cleaned his foot, x-rayed and wrapped it. In our hasty departure from Brighton Beach, Mrs. Gilbert had left her cover-up behind, and so had to sit in the waiting room, then talk to the doctor, in her red swimsuit top with a towel wrapped around her waist. May told us all of this as if she were bringing back news from a foreign land. I doubt the Gilberts, whom we had dropped off at their apartment on the East Side, would have appreciated her relentless reenactment. Having started her story in the middle (sea glass; scream) she doubled back to the beginning upon reaching the end. She then told us about our ride out to the beach, what each of us had had for lunch and how the boys had gone right in to swim even though they weren’t supposed to so soon after eating. She told us how she and Pip, who was Andy’s sister and May’s friend, had gone with me and Mr. Gilbert. “Pip had just found a shell,” May said darkly, “when we heard the first scream.”

“Enough,” her mother said finally. “We were there.” Celeste was handing around a plate of cold chicken. She’d gotten too much sun and her pale skin had burned to a dark red, her shoulders and chest, her face. I could practically feel the heat coming off her. All of us were tired.

“You didn’t ask Andy if you could touch his foot,” May said to me, undeterred. “You didn’t even ask his parents. Don’t you have to ask first?”

I smiled at her, my beautiful black-haired girl. “Nope.”

“Did they teach you how to do that in medical school?” Kevin asked. Neither of the children had sunburns. Celeste had been careful with them and not herself.

“Sure,” I said, aware for the first time how glad I was that it hadn’t been my son’s foot pinned to the sand. “One semester there’s a class on pulling boys’ feet off of nails at beaches, and the next semester you learn how to save people who’ve choked on fish bones.”

What medical school had taught me was how to be decisive: identify the problem, weigh the options, and act – all at the same time. But then, real estate had taught me the same thing. I would have pulled Andy Gilbert’s foot off the nail without a single day of anatomy.

“You shouldn’t make light of it,” my wife said. “You knew what to do.”

May and Kevin stopped. Kevin held an ear of corn in one hand. May put down her fork. We were waiting for her to say it. We looked at Celeste and waited. She shook her head, her curls made somehow lighter after a single afternoon in the sun. “Well, it’s true.”

“You’re a doctor,” May said, leaning forward and leveling her eyes at me. “You should be a doctor.” May could do all of us but she’d made her impersonation of Celeste into high art.

It didn’t matter that we were living a very good life, a life my friends from medical school would never know unless they sold off pages from their prescription pads, Celeste would have preferred to introduce me as a doctor. My husband, Dr. Conroy. In fact she used to do it despite my requests she knock it off. My title was the source of most of the arguments we had that weren’t about my sister.

“ She’s sixty-four years old with three good teeth and a sucker for a handsome cowboy: ‘That Mack McGuire, he makes my heart flutter like a clean sheet on a long line.’ ”

PROLOGUE

20 December 1937

Listen. Three miles deep in the forest just below Arnott’s Ridge, and you’re in silence so dense it’s like you’re wading through it. There’s no birdsong past dawn, not even in high summer, and especially not now, with the chill air so thick with moisture that it stills those few leaves clinging gamely to the branches. Among the oak and hickory nothing stirs: wild animals are deep underground, soft pelts intertwined in narrow caves or hollowed-out trunks. The snow is so deep the mule’s legs disappear up to his hocks, and every few strides he staggers and snorts suspiciously, checking for loose flints and holes under the endless white. Only the narrow creek below moves confidently, its clear water murmuring and bubbling over the stony bed, headed down toward an endpoint nobody around here has ever seen.

Margery O’Hare tests her toes inside her boots, but feeling went a long time back and she winces at the thought of how they’re going to hurt when they warm up again. Three pairs of wool stockings, and in this weather you might as well go bare-legged. She strokes the big mule’s neck, brushing off the crystals forming on his dense coat with her heavy men’s gloves.

“Extra food for you tonight, Charley boy,” she says, and watches as his huge ears flick back. She shifts, adjusting the saddlebags, making sure the mule is balanced as they pick their way down towards the creek. “Hot molasses in your supper. Might even have some myself.”

Four more miles, she thinks, wishing she had eaten more breakfast. Past the Indian escarpment, up the yellow pine track, two more hollers, and old Nancy will appear, singing hymns as she always does, her clear, strong voice echoing through the forest as she walks, arms swinging like a child’s, to meet her.

“You don’t have to walk five miles to meet me,” she tells the woman, every fortnight. “That’s our job. That’s why we’re on horseback.”

“Oh, you girls do enough.”

She knows the real reason. Nancy, like her bedbound sister, Jean, back in the tiny log cabin at Red Lick, cannot countenance even a chance that she will miss the next tranche of stories. She’s sixty-four years old with three good teeth and a sucker for a handsome cowboy: “That Mack McGuire, he makes my heart flutter like a clean sheet on a long line.” She clasps her hands and lifts her eyes to Heaven. “The way Archer writes him, well, it’s like he steps right out of the pages in that book and swings me onto his horse with him.” She leans forward conspiratorially. “Ain’t just that horse I’d be happy riding. My husband said I had quite the seat when I was a girl!”

“I don’t doubt it, Nancy,” she responds, every time, and the woman bursts out laughing, slapping her thighs like this is the first time she's said it.

A twig cracks and Charley's ears flick. Ears that size, he can probably hear halfway to Louisville. "This way, boy," she says, guiding him away from a rocky outcrop. "You'll hear her in a minute."

"Goin' somewhere?"

Margery's head snaps around.

He is staggering slightly, but his gaze is level and direct. His rifle, she sees, is cocked, and he carries it, like a fool, with his finger on the trigger. "So you'll look at me now, will ya, Margery?"

She keeps her voice steady, her mind racing. "I see you, Clem McCullough."

"I see you, Clem McCullough." He spits as he repeats it, like a nasty child in a schoolyard. His hair stands up on one side, like he's slept on it. "You see me while you're lookin' down that nose of yours. You see me like you see dirt on your shoe. Like you're somethin' special."

She has never been afraid of much, but she's familiar enough with these mountain men to know not to pick a fight with a drunk. Especially one bearing a loaded gun.

She conducts a swift mental list of people she may have offended—Lord knows there seem to be a few—but McCullough? Aside from the obvious, she can find nothing.

"Any beef your family had with my daddy, that's buried with him. It's only me left, and I ain't interested in blood feuds."

McCullough is directly in her path now, his legs braced in the snow, his finger still on the trigger. His skin has the purple-blue mottle of someone too drunk to realize how cold he is. Probably too drunk to hit straight, but it's not a chance she wants to take.

She adjusts her weight, slowing the mule; her gaze slides sideways. The banks of the creek are too steep, too dense with trees for her to get past. She would have to persuade him to move or ride right over him, and the temptation to do the latter is strong.

“ She has never been afraid of much, but she's familiar enough with these mountain men to know not to pick a fight with a drunk. Especially one bearing a loaded gun. ”

The mule's ears flick back. In the silence she can hear her own heartbeat, an insistent thump in her ears. She thinks absently that she's not sure she's ever heard it this loud before. "Just doing my job, Mr McCullough. I'd be obliged if you'd let me pass."

He frowns, hears the potential insult in her too-polite use of his name, and as he shifts his gun, she realizes her error.

"Your job . . . Think you're so high and mighty. You know what you need?"

He spits noisily, waiting for her answer. "I said, do you know what you need, girl?"

"Suspect my version of what that might be is going to differ a mile or two from yours."

"Oh, you got all the answers. You think we don't know what you all have been doing? You think we don't know what you've been spreading among decent God-fearing women? We know what you're up to. You got the devil in you, Margery O'Hare, and there's only one way to get the devil out of a girl like you."

"Well, I'd sure love to stop and find out, but I'm busy with my rounds, so maybe we can continue this –"

"Shut up!"

McCullough raises his gun. "Shut that damn mouth of yours."

She clamps it shut.

He takes two steps closer, his legs spread and braced. "Git off the mule."

Charley shifts uneasily. Her heart is an ice pebble in her mouth. If she turns and flees, he'll shoot her. The only route here follows the creek; the forest floor is hardscrabble flint, the trees too dense to find a way forward. There's nobody for miles, she realizes, nobody except old Nancy making her way slowly across the mountaintop.

She's on her own, and he knows it.

His voice lowers. "I said git down, now." He takes two steps closer, his footsteps crunching in the snow.

And there is the bare truth of it, for her and all the women around here. Doesn't matter how smart you are, how clever, how self-reliant—you can always be bettered by a stupid man with a gun. The barrel of his rifle is so close now that she finds herself gazing down two infinite black holes. With a grunt he drops it abruptly, letting it swing behind him on its strap and grabs at her reins. The mule wheels, so that she lurches forward clumsily onto his neck. She feels McCullough claw at her thigh as he reaches back for his gun with his other hand. His breath is sour with drink, and his hand is scaled with dirt; every cell of her body recoils at the feel of it.

And then she hears it, Nancy's voice in the distance.

Oh, what peace we often forfeit!

Oh, what needless pain we bear –

His head lifts. She hears a No!, and some distant part of her recognizes with surprise that it has emerged from her own mouth. His fingers grab and pull at her, one arm reaching for her waist, throwing her off-balance; in his determined grip, his rank breath, she feels her future morphing into something black and awful. But the cold has made him clumsy. He fumbles as he reaches for his gun again, his back to her, and at that moment she sees her chance. She reaches behind into her saddlebag with her left hand, and as he turns his head she drops the reins, grabs the other corner with her right fist, and swings the heavy book as hard as she can, smack, into his face. His gun goes off, the sound a three-dimensional crack! ricocheting off the trees, and she hears the singing briefly silenced, the birds rising into the sky—a shimmering black cloud of flapping wings. As McCullough drops, the mule bucks and lurches forward in fright, stumbling over him, so that she gasps and has to grab the horn of the saddle to stay on.

And then she is off along the creek bed, her breath tight in her throat, her heart pounding, trusting the mule's sure feet to find a hold in the splashing icy water, not daring to look back to see if McCullough has made it to his feet to come after her.

JAMES LOVEGROVE

Sherlock Holmes & the Christmas Demon

A GOTHIC HOLIDAY MYSTERY

9781785658020 | $19.99 HC | Titan Books

Lovegrove is the New York Times-bestselling author of The Age of Odin. He was short-listed for the Arthur C. Clarke Award in 1998 and for the John W. Campbell Memorial Award in 2004. He is the author of Sherlock Holmes: Gods of War, Sherlock Holmes: The Stuff of Nightmares, Sherlock Holmes: The Thinking Engine, and Sherlock Holmes: The Labyrinth of Death.

“ I do my best to be faithful to Conan Doyle’s style, his characters and the rules he established for a Holmes tale. It would be disrespectful otherwise. ”

What can you tell us about Sherlock Holmes and the Christmas Demon?

The story sees Holmes and Watson travel to Fellscar Keep, a huge, rambling castle in deepest, darkest Yorkshire, at the request of Eve, a young woman who believes she is being persecuted a demon from folklore. Eve is about to turn 21 and will shortly come into a large legacy left her by an aunt, but only on condition that she is sane. She, however, very much fears she is going mad. It’s a Gothic, ghostly tale with shades of The Hound of the Baskervilles.

Who is the Black Thurrick, and what is their legend?

The Black Thurrick is the evil antithesis of Father Christmas. Where Santa brings jollity, the Thurrick brings suffering. He’s based on figures from European festive folklore such as Zwarte Piet and Krampus, who seem designed to scare children into obedience, as opposed to the Father Christmas approach of bribing them with gifts. The Thurrick’s “signature” is a bundle of birch twigs placed outside the house, a reminder to the youngsters indoors to behave...or else.

Christmas is the perfect setting for a Dickensian novel. Is there a touch of Dickens in the Christmas Demon? What—beyond Arthur Conan Doyle’s originals—were your influences for the novel?

Dickens, if nothing else, helped equate Christmas with ghost stories in the Victorian mind. The long dark nights of winter mean greater scope for spooky shenanigans. I drew on that tradition in Christmas Demon. I also dug deep into the ways the Victorians celebrated the season. The British Christmas was a pretty drab, low-key affair until Prince Albert brought his Germanic influence to bear in the mid-1800s. Then the occasion became much more elaborate, with the rituals of decking the halls, putting up trees, sending cards, and so on.

Do you ever feel yourself trespassing on Arthur Conan Doyle’s territory when you write Sherlock, or wonder what he’d make of your stories?

I was fairly trepidatious when I started writing Holmes pastiches some seven years ago. It felt like trampling on hallowed ground. However, I do my best to be faithful to Conan Doyle’s style, his characters and the rules he established for a Holmes tale. It would be disrespectful otherwise. I imagine the man himself might take exception to the number of action scenes I include and the overall paces of the storytelling, but he would, I hope, understand that that’s what modern readers demand.

In 1920, in the Christmas Edition of the Strand Magazine, Conan Doyle wrote of the Cottingley Fairies: “The recognition of their existence will jolt the material twentieth century mind out of its heavy ruts in the mud, and will make it admit that there is a glamour and mystery to life.” Does Sherlock believe there is a glamour and mystery to life?

It’s a great irony that, while Conan Doyle wholeheartedly embraced the supernatural, his most famous fictional creation does nothing but reject it. There’s that line in “The Sussex Vampire” when Holmes insists to Watson that “The world is big enough for us. No ghosts need apply.” As far as he’s concerned, the material realm has plenty of mystery and excitement on its own. Rationality is his religion. That’s his approach to the sinister, eerie goings-on in Christmas Demon. He is determined to disprove the existence of the Black Thurrick and also the ghost that is reputed to haunt Fellscar Keep.

Do you believe Sherlock would be sentimental about Christmas? What do you suppose he enjoys doing on Christmas Day?

In the novel I have Holmes dismiss Christmas as “fatuous and tawdry”. He is such a cynical person that I just can’t see him going in for that whole “peace on Earth, goodwill to all men” angle. Certainly, after Watson moved out of Baker Street to live with his wife, I can imagine Holmes sitting alone in his lodgings on Christmas Day ignoring completely the festivities taking place around him; probably doing some work instead. That said, readers of Christmas Demon will discover that beneath his “Bah! Humbug!” attitude there may lie something altogether warmer and kinder. INGRAM

New Titles for Fall 2019

ADULT

The Palimpsests

by ALEKSANDRA LUN,
translated by ELIZABETH BRYER

Polish author Aleksandra Lun's inventive debut novel is an absurdist comedy that grapples with the complexities of immigration, cultural belonging, and personal relationships to language. Set in an asylum purposed to stop writers from writing in their non-native tongues, The Palimpsests features cameos by Beckett, Conrad, Nabokov, and Hemingway... though not in the way one might expect.

OCTOBER 2019

Instant Lives

by HOWARD MOSS
illustrated by EDWARD GOREY

Perfect for those who love literature, Instant Lives's imagined interactions between literary figures and their real or imagined family members, friends, and bitter enemies will delight. Told with the clipping pace of Howard Moss's prose, literary heroes are rendered here as Edward Gorey's iconically gaunt black-and-white Victorians.

A Grammar of Typography: Classical Design in the Digital Age

by MARK ARGETSINGER

Classically-designed typographical manual by award-winning typography expert, Mark Argetsinger. With over 100 full-color illustrations throughout the book, Argetsinger positions the title as a comprehensive typography manual and covers a variety of subjects including font editing, desktop publishing, and house style.

The Guynd A Scottish Journal

by BELINDA RATHBONE

By turns funny, heartwarming, and occasionally sad, The Guynd serves as Rathbone's own account of her marriage to a Scottish landowner and the years they spent together at his large ancestral estate. Like a letter home from a strange land, her memoir offers a view of Scotland not found in the guide books.

CHILDREN'S

Wally the Wordworm

BY CLIFTON FADIMAN, illustrated by ARNOLD ROTH, with a new introduction by ANNE FADIMAN

A worm that lives on words, Wally finds himself starved for inspiration...until one day, he inches into a magical book: the dictionary. From this moment, he embarks upon an odyssey of epic proportions, twisting himself into the likes of "pyx" and "zymurgy".

My Shadow

by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
illustrated by GLENNA LANG

Glenna Lang has created a visual narrative depicting a young girl's travels through a dream nightscape with her shadow companion. Beautifully true to the sense and spirit of Stevenson's work, the illustrations add their own grace and rich atmosphere to the popular poem, a traditional favorite for reading aloud.

Saint Francis and the Wolf

by JANE LANGTON
illustrated by ILSE PLUME

A retelling of one of the less-known Saint Francis lessons centers on the legend of the great wolf of Gubbio, a ferocious canine who terrorized the town until Brother Francis called to the wolf and tamed it with his tenderness. A perfect gift for anyone who embraces the relationship between man and the natural world.

IS YOUR SOURCE FOR MUSIC EDUCATION MATERIALS

ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS

Essential Elements offers beginning students sound pedagogy and engaging music, all carefully paced to successfully start young players on their musical journey. EE features both familiar songs and specially designed exercises, created and arranged for the classroom in a unison-learning environment, as well as instrument-specific exercises to focus each student on the unique characteristics of their own instrument. EE provides both teachers and students with a wealth of materials to develop total musicianship, even at the beginning stages. Essential Elements now includes Essential Elements Interactive (EEi), the ultimate online music education resource. EEi introduces the first-ever, easy set of technology tools for online teaching, learning, assessment, and communication... ideal for teaching today's beginning band and string students, both in the classroom and at home.
