Introducing Disney's New Imprint, Freedom Fire

A Q&A WITH PUBLISHER KWAME MBALIA

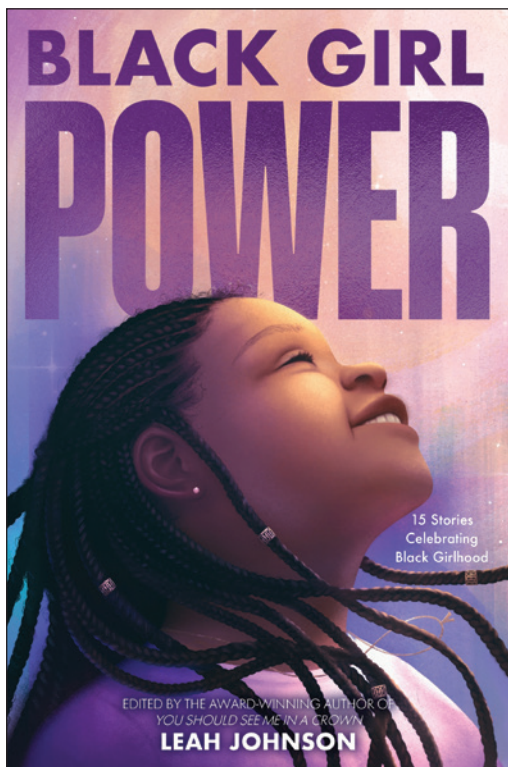

Author photos by Bryan Jones

Freedom Fire is Disney Publishing's newest imprint, dedicated to celebrating and uplifting Black voices and Black stories. This middle-grade imprint, headed by Kwame Mbalia, the #1 New York Times-bestselling author of the Tristan Strong series, will feature stories of Black resilience and Black joy, written by Black creators. Kwame lives with his wife and children outside Raleigh, North Carolina.

“When we say Black stories, we're talking about the Black diaspora, Black people around the world. We're finding, celebrating, uplifting those stories, and then sharing them with the world.”

What inspired Freedom Fire?

That's easy—my love of reading. As a child, I had three or four towering bookshelves in the central playroom outside of our bedroom, filled with books that might have had Coretta Scott King Award stickers on them, or books by independent authors and illustrators, all of whom looked like me. I grew up expecting that to be the norm, and I was shocked when I went to public libraries or to my school library and saw that wasn't the case. It was like getting a bucket of cold water tossed on me, realizing that other kids who looked like me didn't grow up with those books.

I'd always pictured myself opening an independent press down the line but imagine my delight when I was able to work with Disney Publishing! It was amazing, but it also made total sense. As the publisher of imprints such as Jump at the Sun and Rick Riordan Presents (publisher of the Tristan Strong books), Disney is a perfect home for the imprint centered around sharing Black stories.

When we say Black stories, we're talking about the Black diaspora, Black people around the world. We're finding, celebrating, uplifting those stories, and then sharing them with the world. We want to leave those little sparks, those little embers, with every student, classroom, and library we visit, so that they have their own burning flame that they can draw heat and inspiration from to create their own stories.

Can you tell us a bit more about the inaugural list of Freedom Fire?

In August, we kicked off the imprint with Tracey Baptiste's Moko Magic: Carnival Chaos. I love Tracey Baptiste and her Jumbies series, so having her on the imprint is phenomenal. Moko Magic: Carnival Chaos is an Afro Caribbean-inspired story about three cousins who are protector spirits, or mocos. It takes place during the Carnival season in Brooklyn, which is around August, so the timing was perfect. I think it's a brilliant story about family and cousins and, of course, my favorite thing: magic.

9781368064736 | $17.99 HC | Freedom Fire

9781368074377 | $17.99 HC | Freedom Fire

In October, my new series launched with Jax Freeman and the Phantom Shriek. If you love Tristan Strong, you'll love Jax, but they're completely different characters. It was fun writing Jax because he's a big Black kid, and the tendency is to look at him in the real world and shy away, keeping an eye on him. But he is a gentle giant who loves meatball sandwiches and discovers that he can summon power from his ancestors. I posit this question to the universe: Who wouldn't somehow get in trouble if you randomly found out that you could summon power from your ancestors to perform magic? I challenge anyone to make it through the week unscathed.

And in November, we released Black Girl Power, an anthology edited by the incredible Leah Johnson, which I feel is a sort of spiritual companion to Black Boy Joy. They are siblings; they are mirrors to each other, but they also stand alone. Black Girl Power includes contributors like Sharon Draper, Kekla Magoon, Renée Watson, Dhonielle Clayton, and others, who are some of my favorite authors, period. I'm like a kid in the candy shop. It's filled with stories and poems by these amazing creators who talk about the joy and strength and experience of Black girlhood. I hope to see the books sitting next to each other on a shelf, and not just handing Black Boy Joy to a boy and Black Girl Power to a girl, but exchanging them, reading them, and gaining that experience and empathy from sharing those stories with each other.

What are your hopes/goals for the imprint?

I hope this imprint is a force in publishing that will help change the world by promoting stories with characters that readers can relate to and empathize with. I hope they find a safe space between the pages, a destination they can carry with them in their backpack. I want the pages they turn to become tattered and torn because in the act of turning them the reader finds peace and shelter.

Just as my parents, when they saw the Coretta Scott King sticker, felt reassured and validated in putting that book on their shelf, when someone sees a Freedom Fire book, I hope that they're instantly thinking to add them to their collection. When they see that Freedom Fire logo, I want them to think, "I know this is going to be a mirror reflecting all our young Black diaspora readers," but even more so a window for others to read and experience that resilience and that joy. INGRAM

Big Theology for Little Kids

The catechism teaches us what the Bible teaches us: our faith. The catechism is “fat,” bursting at the seams with meaning and challenge. FatCat is our way of making the catechism approachable, bringing theology to readers of all ages.

“The FatCat series gives children a vision of the Bible’s ethic, its confession, and its devotional life. This ancient-but-new set of lenses, what the church has called the ‘rule of faith,’ will equip your kids for a lifelong Christian journey.”

—Jared Kennedy, editor at The Gospel Coalition;
author of books for children and families
